Ordinaris Dingsdaegsche Courante

Amsterdam, 1638–1671

Although the newspaper trade was still in its infancy, by the end of the 1630s Amsterdam had spawned its first periodical dynasties. The Van Hiltens, father and son, had successively managed the Courante uyt Italien, Duytslandt, &c. from the beginning, and now Joost Broersz (1608/1609–1647) followed his father Broer Jansz into the newspaper trade. Broersz published the Ordinaris Dingsdaegsche Courante, one of the first mid-week Amsterdam newspapers. The first extant issue of Broersz's new venture dates from the summer of 1639, but already in 1638 the Leiden city council subscribed to a weekly newspaper published by Broersz for the sum of three gulden.<sup>1</sup> It is therefore certain that Broersz published a periodical from at least 1638, if not earlier.

This newspaper started as the unnumbered Courante Extra-Ordinaire, presented in the conventional style of the Amsterdam periodicals: a half-sheet folio, printed on both sides in double columns. Printed on Tuesdays, the Courante Extra-Ordinaire already presented a compilation of around twelve reports in 1639, a competitive quantity for a new periodical. This was vital for the success of the venture: from its inception the newspaper competed on Tuesdays with the Ordinarise Middel-weekse Courante, started in 1638 by François Lieshout.<sup>2</sup> From 1640 the title of Broersz's newspaper settled as Ordinaris Dingsdaegsche Courante.

Joost Broersz clearly followed in the footsteps of his father, Broer Jansz. It is likely that Joost Broersz received ample training in his father's print shop, where he presumably learned the routines of newspaper production. Active in the book trade from 1634, Broersz settled in the Pijlsteeg in the "Boeck-Druckerye" (print shop) in 1637 and would remain there until his death.<sup>3</sup> Over the course of thirteen years Broersz was responsible for the publication of more than 200 books. The vast majority of titles known from Broersz's press are short works of only a few sheets each. Like his father, he specialised in ephemera and current affairs: over three-quarters of his output can be classified as such.<sup>4</sup> In the later 1630s and 1640s Broersz specifically targeted the market for English news, and catered for the growing English exile community in the Dutch Republic with English bibles and commentaries on the progress of the Civil Wars. Broersz supplemented his current affairs business with a trade in other popular ephemeral works: professional handbooks, collections of poetry and wedding poems. His press was frequently used by a variety of other Amsterdam publishers, including Willem Jansz Blaeu, Nicolaes van Ravesteyn, Barent Otsz and Hans Walschart.<sup>5</sup> Judging by the extensive variety of typographical material used by Broersz, it seems that from 1640 his business was flourishing.<sup>6</sup>

Joost Broersz died in late April or early May 1647, some five years before his father, and was succeeded as publisher by his widow, Willemijntje Broersz (?–1661).<sup>7</sup> Willemijntje was originally from Leiden; she had married Joost in 1633. They had five children, two of whom died young.<sup>8</sup> One of their sons, Broer Appelaer, would start the bi-weekly Utrechtse Courant in 1675.<sup>9</sup> Willemijntje maintained the print shop of her late husband, and published the Ordinaris Dingsdaegsche Courant until her death in late June 1661.<sup>10</sup> Her extant corpus of publications indicates that she enlarged her husband's focus on the vernacular devotional and literary market. In the later 1640s she was also responsible for the weekly Saterdaegsche Courante.<sup>11</sup>

Willemijntje oversaw the greatest transformation of the Ordinaris Dingsdaegsche Courante in 1654, when it turned from a weekly to a fortnightly schedule of publication. It now shared Tuesdays with the Ordinarise Middel-weekse Courante. In 1655, Willemijntje purchased a house for 5,400 gulden; the loss of competition certainly did not stifle her business.<sup>12</sup> At the death of Willemijntje the Ordinaris Dingsdaegsche Courante was taken over by Johannes (III) van Ravesteyn (1618–1681).<sup>13</sup> Van Ravesteyn was part of one of the great publishing families of the Dutch Republic—his uncle was Paulus Aertsz van Ravesteyn, the printer of the first Statenbijbel, and his cousin was Nicolaes van Ravesteyn, a notable force in the Amsterdam theological and literary market. Johannes (III) had a privileged upbringing, learning his trade in the business of mapmaker and publisher Joan (I) Blaeu, and marrying the sister of the son-in-law of another giant of the Amsterdam book trade, Hendrick Laurensz.<sup>14</sup> Van Ravesteyn established his premises in the former shop of Laurensz from 1650 onwards, on the Water [now the Damrak], in the “Schrijf-boeck” (Writing book)—a location which put him at the heart of the Amsterdam book trade and news market. His business was further enhanced by his appointment as stadsdrukker of Amsterdam on 15 January 1659, a privilege he held for sixteen years.<sup>15</sup> This was a position which undoubtedly encouraged the Amsterdam magistrates to select him as successor of Willemijntje Broersz in 1661.

Johannes van Ravesteyn started his career in the book trade by 1644 (joining the St Luke’s guild in 1650), and over the course of almost thirty years was responsible for more than 300 editions (in addition to his jobbing work as stadsdrukker). For a newspaper publisher, his corpus contains remarkably few publications related to current affairs: it consists of large tomes of academic, devotional, classical and literary matter. Van Ravesteyn’s education with Blaeu, and his background in the more prosperous circles of the Amsterdam book trade, had a profound influence on his own career. Unlike the first two generations of Amsterdam newspapermen, Johannes van Ravesteyn was a publisher with a significant number of Latin titles to his name, making his greatest profits in the academic and literary trade, targeting markets in the Dutch Republic and abroad. Joost and Willemijntje Broersz had made their profits from more ephemeral and vernacular works, but Van Ravesteyn was part of a generation of newspaper proprietors marked out more by their capital and education than their experience as newsmen.

Once he had established control of the Ordinaris Dingsdaegsche Courante, Van Ravesteyn presided over a major transformation of its content. An analysis of the places of correspondence of the Ordinaris Dingsdaegsche Courante reveals that the average number of reports per issue rose from twelve between 1639 and 1661 to 18.5 between 1661 and 1671.<sup>16</sup> The correspondence networks of Joost and Willemijntje Broersz were extensive, but liable to fluctuations—many issues would pass without news from France, England or the Baltic region. Van Ravesteyn was able to offer more regular reports from Rome, Venice, London and Brussels and often multiple reports from Paris, Vienna, Hamburg and Warsaw. On the other hand, Van Ravesteyn was only required to publish one issue every fortnight, whereas husband and wife Broersz published an issue every week until 1654. It seems that Joost and Willemijntje Broersz were more prepared to pursue shifts in the news market, following areas of conflict or turmoil, whereas Van Ravesteyn invested more in established nodes of the postal network which guaranteed a steady stream of reports.

The Ordinaris Dingsdaegsche Courante featured a steady growth in the placement of advertisements and public announcements. Out of ninety-six issues inspected for the period 1646–1650, only nineteen issues had none; for the period from 1651 to 1671, only seven issues out of 105 had no advertisements or public announcements. Johannes van Ravesteyn’s issue from 26 April 1667 featured five advertisements and announcements, covering almost an entire column of the newspaper. The issue from 22 September 1648 was one of the first newspaper issues in the Dutch Republic to feature horizontally-placed advertisements at the end of the issue. This was a fashion which would replace the placements of advertisements within the columns by the final decades of the century. It allowed newsmen to use every last inch of space on the double sided folios, albeit creating an unusual and rather untidy appearance.

Around 20 % of all issues (251 in total) of the Ordinaris Dingsdaegsche Courante have survived from its thirty-four-year run. Survival rates are very poor for the first six years, with no extant issues from 1641 or 1642. The surviving issues are otherwise spread relatively evenly, with a concentration in the later 1640s. Major holdings in Stockholm, Oldenburg and Moscow make up the bulk of known copies, with other stray issues found in Paris, London, Amsterdam, Bruges, Uppsala, The Hague, Zürich, Hannover and Wolfenbüttel.

The final extant issues of the Ordinaris Dingsdaegsche Courante date from 1671. In 1672 Van Ravesteyn was the fourth and final Amsterdam newspapermen to join the publishing consortium of the Amsterdamsche Courant, started in 1670 by Matheus Cousaert and Otto Barentsz Smient (and joined in 1671 by Casparus Commelijn).<sup>17</sup> As a tribute to his former newspaper, Van Ravesteyn named his fortnightly issue the Ordinaris Dingsdaeghse Amsterdamse Courante.

NB.

The spelling of the Ordinaris Dingsdaegsche Courante varied constantly. After the brief use of Courante Extra-Ordinaire in 1639, it was entitled Ordinaris Dingsdaeghse Courante in 1640, Ordinaris Dingsdaegsche Courante throughout 1643–1645, Ordinaris Dinghs-daegsche Courante throughout 1646–1647, and Ordinaris Dings-daegsche Courante at the start of 1648. From mid-1648 until 1659 it was diversely entitled Ordinaris Dingsdaegsche

Courante, Ordinaris Dinghsdaegsche Courante or Ordinaris Dingsdaeghsche Courante. Throughout the tenure of Johannes van Ravesteyn it settled as Ordinaris Dingsdaeghsche Courant.

The first issue of 1648 was published on 31 December 1647, the first issue of 1649 appeared on 29 December 1648, and the first issue of 1653 appeared on 31 December 1652.

Willemijntje Broersz skipped a number in the sequence of numbers 1–10 in January or February 1650.

In 1655 Willemijntje Broersz published an additional number of the Ordinaris Dingsdaegsche Courante: number 4 of 26 January. This issue was supposed to have been published by Sara Vlaminck of the Ordinarise Middelweeckse Courante under the established alternating schedule of the two Tuesday titles.

Europische Courant Amsterdam, 1642–1646

The Europische Courant was the first regular tri-weekly newspaper to appear in Europe.<sup>1</sup> It made a significant contribution to the expansion of the Amsterdam newspaper market in the early 1640s. The first issue was published by Mathijs van Meininga (fl. 1642–1646), an Amsterdam publisher, on Saturday 1 March 1642.<sup>2</sup> This was followed on 4 March by a Tuesday issue, and the Thursday edition of the Europische Courant was added two months later, on 15 May.<sup>3</sup> 207 issues (including four variants and fourteen special issues) of the Europische Courant have survived between 1642 and 1646. Most extant editions are located in Sweden: the Kungliga Biblioteket in Stockholm holds 124 issues and the university library of Uppsala holds seventeen. Other stray issues have survived in Oldenburg, Zürich, Ghent, The Hague, Leiden, Utrecht, Hannover, Wolfenbüttel, Princeton and Moscow.

Filling a tri-weekly periodical was a pioneering and challenging endeavour. While the publication of a bi-weekly on Tuesdays and Saturdays left ample time for the translation and editing of news reports, as well as the composition and printing of the newspaper, the addition of a Thursday edition reduced this process to an interval of only one day on Wednesdays and Fridays. It is therefore no surprise that Van Meininga's Thursday issue usually contained the fewest number of reports: an average of 11.7 reports per issue, as opposed to 13.5 reports on Tuesdays and 16.3 reports on Saturdays.<sup>4</sup> Later publishers, such as Abraham Casteleyn in Haarlem, would find the addition of a Thursday edition equally challenging.<sup>5</sup>

The weekly issues of the Europische Courant give a fascinating insight into the workings of the seventeenth-century postal system, and its effect on the publication of a tri-weekly newspaper. Each weekday's issue of the Europische Courant presented reports with a distinctly different geographical composition. The Tuesday issue was often the only edition with reports from North-West Italy and Southern France (Genoa, Turin and Marseille); the Thursday issue brought news from the Baltic region (Stettin, Lübeck and Danzig); and the Saturday issue specialised in reports from the Eastern and Southern Holy Roman Empire (Vienna, Leipzig, Regensburg, Prague, Erfurt and Dresden), as well as news from towns along the "Spanish road" (Milan, Strasbourg). Reports sourced from locations closer to the Low Countries were in greater abundance throughout the week. News from Antwerp, Hamburg and London featured equally across all three issues; reports from Paris, Cologne, Frankfurt and Münster were available in at least two issues a week.

Van Meininga was the first Dutch newspaper publisher to name his print shop after his newspaper: he established his premises in the "Courant", and from the end of 1644 in the "Europische Courant".<sup>6</sup> In 1642 Van Meininga was living in the Sint Nicolaasstraat, but specified that the newspaper was published on the Dam square in the "twee Hammen" (two hams). By 1645 Van Meininga was still publishing on the Dam, but now behind the shop of Johannes Colom, the "vuyrige Colom" (flaming column).

Mathijs van Meininga had his hands full with the publication of a tri-weekly. While many of his rivals diversified their output as publishers, Van Meininga did not venture beyond current affairs. He published various special issues to complement his newspaper. These are similar half-sheet folios, with double columns like the Europische Courant. Their content consists largely of letters concerning the English Civil Wars; many too long for the weekly

1 There are possibly two other contenders for the title of the first tri-weekly. The Paris Gazette was published twice a week from 1631 onwards, but with the irregular addition of Extraordinaires (special issues) published once or twice a week; even earlier, Abraham Verhoeven's Nieuwe Tijdinghen (1620–1629) usually appeared three or four times a week, but without strict periodicity and with alternative content (see chapter 4). The first newspaper in the Holy Roman Empire to issue more than two issues a week was Isabel Meyer's Hamburg Zeitung from 1644. After the Europische Courant, three other tri-weeklies would emerge in the Dutch Republic in the seventeenth century: the Oprechte Haerlemse Courant (tri-weekly from 1667) the Amsterdamsche Courant (tri-weekly from 1673) and the Oprechte Leydse Courant (tri-weekly from 1686). After Verhoeven's Nieuwe Tijdinghen, no tri-weekly would be published in the Southern Netherlands before the eighteenth century.

2 The earliest surviving Saturday issue is number 36 of 1 November.

3 The earliest surviving Tuesday issue is number 20 of 15 July; the earliest surviving Thursday issue is number 5 of 12 June.

4 Out of 207 surviving issues, 204 have been inspected. The variant and special issues were not included in this analysis: this left 186 issues.

5 See chapter 31.

6 Broer Appelaer, courantier in Utrecht from 1675 onwards, would also name his shop the "Courant". See chapter 46.

issues, but likely to prove popular to Van Meininga's customers nevertheless. Van Meininga intended the issues to complement his regular tri-weekly: in one special issue, Van Meininga notified the reader that the reports that made up its contents would be continued in the forthcoming regular edition.<sup>7</sup> Only one surviving work by Van Meininga (an illustrated broadsheet on the conquest of Bristol by Thomas Fairfax in 1645) cannot be classified as such a special issue.<sup>8</sup> We do know from Van Meininga's advertisements in the Europische Courant that he did publish some lengthier works, including a historical review of the year 1644 and an almanac featuring all the victories of the Princes of Orange.<sup>9</sup>

Four variant issues of the Europische Courant have been identified. Each is a Saturday issue, and an example of the use of "stop-press" news employed by Van Meininga's competitors Jan van Hilten and Broer Jansz in the same period.<sup>10</sup> In each documented case of a variant, Van Meininga included additional reports while an issue was already on the press. On two occasions (7 October 1645 and 11 November 1645) this warranted the exclusion of older reports. The existence of these variants demonstrates that Van Meininga, though new to the business, was every bit as technically competent as his established Amsterdam rivals.

In contrast to its competitors, the Europische Courant featured few advertisements. Van Meininga advertised several times for his own work, and on 29 April 1645 he also advertised for an apprentice to work at his shop.<sup>11</sup> Only two other advertisers used the Europische Courant. On 1 November 1642 the bookseller Ritsert Nannings advertised a work by Johann Seyffert against Hugo Grotius, and on 28 March 1643 an unknown vendor notified readers of the sale of different types of French and German paper in Rotterdam.<sup>12</sup> The lack of advertisements in the Europische Courant is striking when compared to the other Amsterdam newspapers. Perhaps Van Meininga's periodical was less popular with booksellers and publishers throughout the country; it seems difficult to imagine that a publisher of a tri-weekly would not quickly embrace the financial benefits of advertising if they were able to do so.

Van Meininga is a little-known pioneer of the newspaper industry. The publisher behind the first tri-weekly in Europe is one of the most obscure newspapermen of the Dutch Republic. His date of birth and death are unknown; the only concrete information available is the birth of a son in early 1641.<sup>13</sup> We can therefore be particularly grateful for the recent discovery of two letters from Van Meininga in the correspondence of the writer and mathematician Samuel Hartlib (c. 1600–1662) in London.<sup>14</sup> These, though brief, shed important new light on Van Meininga's venture.

Both letters are written in German by Mathijs van Meininga. The first is addressed to Hartlib, dated from 20 January 1642 (two months before the first issue of the Europische Courant appeared).<sup>15</sup> In this letter Van Meininga solicits Hartlib's services as a regular news correspondent. Clearly Van Meininga was searching for a reliable compiler of news from London, as he asks Hartlib to recommend other correspondents if he does not wish to take on the position himself.

This request explains the second letter by Van Meininga in the collection, dated from 24 February 1642, and addressed to Andreas Tolner, a contact of Hartlib in London.<sup>16</sup> With this letter Van Meininga replies to a (now lost) letter by Tolner, who demands 20 Reichstalers per quarter for his services as correspondent.<sup>17</sup> Van Meininga is willing to offer only 15 Reichstalers, but assures Tolner that he has friends in London who will be able to pay him in cash. Van Meininga is also keen to reassure Tolner that he will be associating himself with a reputable venture. He provides evidence of his connections in the news business: he professes his friendship with Jan van Hilten (the newspaper 17 Equivalent to the Dutch Rijksdaalder, worth 2.5 gulden. An annual sum of 150 gulden (the equivalent of 15 Rijksdaalders paid each quarter) was a decent salary for a single newsletter service, and an serious investment by Van Meininga: the salary of a Reformed minister in the Dutch Republic was around 400–500 gulden a year.

publisher of the Courante uyt Italien, Duytslandt, &c.), and refers to a mutual friend of Tolner and Meininga in Hamburg. Lastly, Meininga asks Tolner to dispatch his newsletter to Rotterdam, where Meininga has a cousin.<sup>18</sup>

A third letter in the collection, written by Johann Morian to Hartlib on 24 February, exposes more about Van Meininga's background.<sup>19</sup> Morian, a minister and alchemist in Amsterdam, writes in a newsletter to Hartlib that he hopes that Andreas Tolner will agree to provide a regular newsletter to Van Meininga, whom Morian refers to as a "nobleman from Frisia".

These letters are highly revealing. Van Meininga was eager to make reference to Jan van Hilten as a trustworthy contact: this gives some indication of the reputation and standing of Van Hilten within the international news market. Van Meininga sketches a picture of a friendly, if not a familiar bond between the Amsterdam newspapermen. This was not a cutthroat industry in which the established publishers guarded their position at all cost.

The last extant issue of the Europische Courant is number 47 of Tuesday 20 November 1646. While many Tuesday and Saturday issues of 1646 have survived, the final Thursday issue dates from 21 December 1645. It is possible that Van Meininga suffered from the pressures of the tri-weekly publication schedule, and abandoned the Thursday edition in 1646. It is likely that Mathijs van Meininga died in December 1646 or sometime in the later 1640s. While we know very little of his background and career, the surviving issues of the Europische Courant give an insight into the dynamism of the Amsterdam periodical market of the 1640s, as well as the continuing innovation of its pioneers.

NB.

The spelling of the Europische Courant is somewhat irregular. Until the summer of 1643 the word Europische was followed by a full stop. The Thursday edition became the Euroopse Donderdaegs Courant in 1645 (with one issue entitled Europisse Donderdaegs Courant). In 1645 Meininga also changed the spelling of the days in the title: Saterdaeghs, Dingsdaeghs and Donderdaeghs became Saterdaegs, Dingsdaegs and Donderdaegs. No Thursday issues have been inferred for the year 1646.

<sup>18</sup> It is my conjecture that this cousin could be the anonymous paper merchant who advertised in the Europische Courant on 28 March 1643.

<sup>19</sup> Johann Morian to Samuel Hartlib, 24 February 1642, letter 37/104A–B, on The Hartlib Papers.

Extraordinaire Advijzen op Donderdag Amsterdam, 1644–1645

Jan van Hilten (c. 1602–1655) was one of the first established newspapermen of the Low Countries and arguably the most prominent courantier of his day. Since 1623 Van Hilten had published on Saturdays the Courante uyt Italien, Duytslandt, &c., begun by his father and published from at least 1618.<sup>1</sup> In the 1640s the younger Van Hilten decided to expand his business profile, and launch a second, mid-week newspaper. This, the Extraordinaire Advijzen op Donderdag, appeared on Thursdays in 1644 and 1645. In total, forty issues of the Extraordinaire Advijzen have survived. Almost all surviving copies are located in Stockholm and Uppsala. The earliest known copy of the Extraordinaire Advijzen dates from 11 February 1644, with the final extant issue appearing sixteen months later, on 29 June 1645.

The Extraordinaire Advijzen was printed by Jan Fredericksz Stam (c. 1602–1667), the printer of Van Hilten's Saturday Courante. From June 1645 Stam's stepson, Jacob Veseler (c. 1614–?), took over the printing of both titles. The design of the Extraordinaire Advijzen is almost identical to the Saturday Courante, and was produced with the same set of typefaces. The Extraordinaire Advijzen appeared, like all Amsterdam newspapers, as a double sided half-sheet folio. The only clear distinguishing feature of the Extraordinaire Advijzen was its lack of numbering.

The Extraordinaire Advijzen contained for the most part news from Northern Europe. Many issues opened with news from England, before listing reports from the Baltic, the Northern Holy Roman Empire and the Low Countries. Jan van Hilten specialised in gathering reports from the British Isles during the English Civil Wars, and was able to cultivate an unmatched network of correspondents which spread from London to the West Country and the northern borders of England. The first page of issues published on 27 October and 3 November 1644 were dedicated entirely to reports from England. There was little news from France, the Mediterranean or Southern Germanic lands in the Extraordinaire Advijzen; Van Hilten saved such news for his Saturday Courante uyt Italien. This was a shrewd diversification based both on Van Hilten's business instincts and the logistical practicalities of the postal network. By adding a Thursday edition to his repertoire, Van Hilten was able to offer his customers an early digest of Northern European news. This was a valuable asset at a time when the Amsterdam news market was at its most competitive. Around the time of the establishment of the Extraordinaire Advijzen several new courantiers had entered the market. By 1645 not only Van Hilten but Joost Broersz, François Lieshout, Mathijs van Meininga, and Jan Jacobsz Bouman published a mid-week newspaper.<sup>2</sup>

One extant issue of the newspaper was entitled Extraordinaire Advijzen op Woensdag, and published on Wednesday 29 March 1645. This is a variant of the Thursday edition published on 30 March—both issues contain the same news reports. The 29 March issue was not a misprint—it is unlikely that the compositor would mistakenly change the title from “Thursday” to “Wednesday”. It is possible that Jan van Hilten regularly printed two variant editions: on Wednesdays and Thursdays, intending the separate print runs for different customers or markets. A second Wednesday edition survives for 24 May 1645—yet no Thursday edition for 25 May is extant, so this theory remains only speculative.

Like many of its contemporary rivals, the lifespan of the Extraordinaire Advijzen is uncertain. It is very well possible that Jan van Hilten published the additional mid-weekly paper for most of the 1640s, if not from the late 1630s onwards. The lack of numbering, as well as the presence of “Extraordinary” in the title, may suggest that Van Hilten only intended to publish the newspaper as long as there was enough news of interest from the British Isles, the Holy Roman Empire and the Baltic—and as long as he could make a profit doing so. Interestingly, Jan van Hilten may have been in financial difficulties around the time he was publishing the Extraordinaire Advijzen. On 18 April 1645 he was ordered by the local magistrates to repay an overdue debt of 1,000 gulden to unspecified colleagues in the book trade.<sup>3</sup> Perhaps the additional newspaper was a step too far in a crowded market, and Van Hilten was now seriously over-extended.

Extra Europische tijdingen uyt verscheyde Quartieren Amsterdam, 1645

Jan Jacobsz Bouman (?–1671), the son-in-law of Broer Jansz (1579–1652) and brother-in-law of Joost Broersz (1608/1609–1647), was the third member of the Jansz family to enter the Amsterdam newspaper market. When he did so, newspaper production in Amsterdam reached its zenith. In 1644, the weekly production of the Amsterdam newspapermen totalled eight Dutch issues. On Tuesdays one could purchase newspapers from François Lieshout, Joost Broersz and Mathijs van Meininga; on Thursdays from Jan van Hilten and Van Meininga; and on Saturdays from Broer Jansz, Van Hilten and Van Meininga.<sup>1</sup> This extraordinary competition, unrivalled in Europe, would be further intensified in 1645.

Bouman had married the daughter of Broer Jansz, Aeltje, in 1640.<sup>2</sup> It seems that he started work as a compositor, before entering the Guild of St Luke in 1643 as a bookseller and printer. His earliest extant publication, a schoolbook by Sybrandt Hansz Cardinael, dates from 1644.<sup>3</sup> However, an advertisement placed in the Tijdinghen uyt verscheyden Quartieren by Bouman on 14 March 1643 reveals that he was already active as a publisher by this stage.<sup>4</sup>

By the summer of 1645, Bouman had become a newspaperman. His periodical, the Extra Europische tijdingen uyt verscheyde Quartieren, was published twice a week, on Mondays and Thursdays. Eleven issues of the newspaper have survived, dated between 24 July and 31 August.<sup>5</sup> The Extra Europische tijdingen was very similar in design to the other Amsterdam newspapers: a half-sheet folio, printed on both sides with double columns; and composed with a black letter typeface for news reports but a roman typeface for the datelines and headers. The Extra Europische tijdingen was unnumbered, and it is therefore unclear when exactly the newspaper was first published. It is unlikely that Bouman started the Extra Europische tijdingen before 1643 or 1644.

The title of Bouman's newspaper, Extra Europische tijdingen uyt verscheyde Quartieren, was a clear imitation of, if not a supplement to, Broer Jansz's Tijdinghen uyt verscheyde Quartieren. This raises the question whether Bouman's periodical venture was truly independent. To what extent, if any, was he working together with, or for, his father-in-law? The range of places of correspondence in the surviving issues of the Extra Europische tijdingen reveal similar news networks to those found in the Tijdinghen. Bouman's issues largely contained reports from Italy, France, London, Antwerp and the Dutch army—comparable to Broer Jansz's personal connections. As competition in the Amsterdam news market increased around 1644, Broer Jansz may have considered expanding his influence through the establishment of a mid-week venture fronted by his young son-in-law. With the addition of the Extra Europische tijdingen, the Jansz family now published newspapers on four days of the week.

Bouman was the first Amsterdam newspaperman not to be a news specialist. With business premises centrally located “on the Water” (now the Damrak), near the Kapelsteeg, Bouman's repertoire consisted almost entirely of schoolbooks, Bibles, plays and literature. Throughout his career his output of current affairs publications was negligible, in stark contrast to his rivals. Whereas Mathijs van Meininga and François Lieshout were newsmen through and through, and Broer Jansz and Jan van Hilten had built their vast publishing business on the foundations of the news market, Bouman seems to have had no such pretensions. It would be extraordinary if Bouman had chosen to publish a bi-weekly newspaper—a serious investment of time and money—without publishing at the same time a range of news pamphlets and broadsheets. This absence can only be explained by the fact that the news gathering for the Extra Europische tijdingen and perhaps its financing was undertaken by Broer Jansz, who then delegated the printing and sale to Bouman.

After 1645 Jan Jacobsz Bouman certainly remained closely involved with the family business. He engaged in several co-operative projects with the widow of Joost

Broersz, Willemijntje (?–1661).<sup>6</sup> From 1654 Bouman also published almanacs together with Gillis Joosten Saeghman, a nephew of Broer Jansz and later co-publisher of the Wekelycke Nieuws printed in The Hague.<sup>7</sup> On the death of Broer Jansz in 1652, Bouman took over the publication of the Saturday Tijdinghen uyt verscheyde Quartieren, as well as Broer Jansz's annual book trade catalogue, the Catalogus Universalis.<sup>8</sup> By this point the

Extra Europische tijdingen had ceased publication, and it seems unlikely that the bi-weekly title, like the mid-week venture of Jan van Hilten and Mathijs van Meininga's tri-weekly Europische Courant, lasted until the end of the 1640s.<sup>9</sup> Bouman continued in the capacity of printer and publisher of the Tijdinghen—but under the name of the widow of Broer Jansz—until his death in January 1671.<sup>10</sup>

Saterdaeghsche Courante Amsterdam, 1648

Willemijntje Broersz (?–1661), the widow of Joost Broersz and publisher of the Ordinaris Dingsdaegsche Courante, was at one point also responsible for a weekly Saturday newspaper: the Saterdaeghsche Courante.<sup>1</sup> This Saturday newspaper was similar in design to Willemijntje's other newspaper and was published as a half-sheet folio, like all Amsterdam periodicals. Only three issues of this Saturday edition have survived: issues 35 (misnumbered as 36), 38 and 40, dated from 29 August, 19 September and 3 October 1648 respectively. All are found in the Kungliga Biblioteket in Stockholm.

It is highly likely that the Saterdaeghsche Courante was published before 1648, given that newspaper publishers rarely started a new periodical in the first week of January.<sup>2</sup> It is possible that Willemijntje's husband, Joost (1608/1609–1647), first introduced the additional edition on Saturdays in order to compete on the most popular day of publication, when his father (Broer Jansz), Jan van Hilten and Mathijs van Meininga already touted for custom. If this was the case, then four Saturday newspapers were published in Amsterdam in the mid-1640s. Yet it seems more probable that Willemijntje started the Saterdaeghsche Courante towards the end of 1647, shortly after the disappearance of Mathijs van Meininga's Europische Courant.<sup>3</sup> This gap in the market would have been an ideal opportunity for an established publisher such as Willemijntje Broersz—her Saturday edition could have been marketed to attract the former customers of Van Meininga's venture.

Whatever success Broersz may have had with the Saterdaeghsche Courante did not last long. By 1656 it had disappeared, as the Amsterdam burgomasters noted that there were only two Saturday newspapers published in the city (the Courante uyt Italien and the Tijdinghen uyt verscheyde Quartieren).<sup>4</sup> The majority of the news reports in the three extant issues of the Saterdaeghsche Courante concerned the tense closing negotiations which dominated the final months of the Thirty Years' War. Perhaps Willemijntje saw a decline in her profits with the end to this momentous conflict, and concentrated her efforts on her established mid-week slot in the Amsterdam press cycle.

<sup>2</sup> Counting back from issue 35 of 29 August 1648, issue 1 of the Saterdaeghsche Courante will have been published on Saturday 4 January 1648.

Mercurius Anglo-Britannus The Hague, 1648

The weekly Mercurius Anglo-Britannus is the earliest known periodical venture of Samuel Browne (1611–1665), a prolific English Royalist publisher active in The Hague from January 1647 onwards.<sup>1</sup> Only two issues (numbers 4 and 10) have survived: both are extant in the Niedersächsisches Landesarchiv in Oldenburg. Issue 4 dates from Monday 2 March 1648 and issue 10 from Monday 20 April 1648.<sup>2</sup>

The Mercurius Anglo-Britannus marks an important milestone in the development of the news market in the Dutch Republic. It does not conform to the standards set by scholars on the definition of a newspaper (due to its exclusive focus on news from the British Isles), and it is usually excluded on that basis.<sup>3</sup> However, it is important to discuss the Mercurius Anglo-Britannus as it is the first of a series of news publications which emerged in The Hague in the mid-seventeenth-century, sparking a transformation of the Dutch newspaper trade. This was a serial which presented a partisan political voice through a style of reporting adopted from the many newsbooks of the English Civil War.<sup>4</sup>

The full title of the serial was Mercurius Anglo-Britannus. Mededeylende Tydinghe van verscheyde Ghedeelten uyt Engelandt, Schotlandt, ende Irlandt. Aengaende den Coninck, het Parlament ende de drie Coninckrijcken (Mercurius Anglo-Britannus. Presenting tidings from various parts of England, Scotland and Ireland. Concerning the King, the Parliament and the three Kingdoms). The serial was devoted purely to the British Isles, where the English Civil War had raged in several stages since the later 1630s. The conflict reached new heights in 1648 with the eruption of several Royalist revolts in Scotland and England.

Extrapolating from the first dated survivor it seems that the first issue of the Mercurius Anglo-Britannus was published on Monday 10 February 1648. The serial appeared as a half-sheet folio, printed in the double-column format of the Amsterdam newspapers, but the style of the content was unmistakably borrowed from the English pamphlet newsbook. This was a style pioneered from 1641 by the first “Parliamentary Intelligencers” published in London. These serial printed newsbooks recorded daily exchanges in the Houses of Parliament, presenting a weekly digest of debates and British political news. Rather than carrying a headline denoting a report’s geographical origin, each report was headlined by date, without reference to the specific origin of the information. This was also the case with the Mercurius Anglo-Britannus: news was presented under headlines stating “Tuesday 9 April”, “Wednesday 10 April”, and so forth. The title of each issue was also subtitled by the date range of the reports featured: “From 14 February until 21 February, 1648” and “From 3 April until 10 April, 1648”.

Each dated report in the Mercurius Anglo-Britannus consisted of one or several letters. Most letters in the two surviving issues seem to have originated from London, and largely concern discussions in Parliament. Other letters seem to have been despatched from Newcastle, Dorset, Scotland and the Isle of Wight, where King Charles I was imprisoned.

The entrepreneur behind this venture was Samuel Browne, English printer and bookseller, living near the English church in “t Moriaens Hooft” (the Moor’s head).<sup>5</sup> Browne had worked in the London book trade from 1633 onwards, but had fled to The Hague in 1646, where he had set up a print shop by January 1647.<sup>6</sup> Many Royalist sympathisers had fled the British Isles for France and the Dutch Republic in the mid-1640s, and The Hague became one of the primary destinations after the arrival of the Prince of Wales, the later Charles II, in 1648. Browne quickly became one of the leading voices of the Royalist cause in the Dutch Republic. Within two years he had become one of the most productive printers in The Hague. To Browne, the Mercurius Anglo-Britannus was only one means of aiding the king; he printed Latin orations, intercepted Parliamentary letters, details of peace negotiations, and warnings of the excesses of Parliament and its allies. Browne supplied books for the English court-in-exile in The Hague, and managed to gain the exclusive rights for the printing of the Eikon Basilike—officially banned in England—in the Dutch Republic.<sup>7</sup>

The Mercurius Anglo-Britannus was the first news serial published in the Dutch Republic to present a wholly one-sided perspective of a foreign conflict. The Amsterdam weeklies were eager to portray Dutch military engagements in a good light, and most publishers favoured the international Protestant cause, but they remained outwardly cautious when presenting foreign conflicts. The Mercurius Anglo-Britannus had no such restraint: its reports celebrated the successes of Royalist troops, and denounced the wickedness of Parliamentary decisions and the altogether miserable state of the British Isles under Republican rule. One report in the fourth issue from Tuesday 18 February stated definitively that “the common people have a settled prejudice against Parliament, given its treatment of their King.”<sup>8</sup>

This Royalist perspective was intended specifically for the prosperous and influential members of Dutch society: regents, lawyers, merchants and preachers. From 1648 onwards Browne delivered “English newspapers” to the Court of Holland.<sup>9</sup> It is unclear whether these newspapers were issues of Browne’s Mercurius Anglo-Britannus, or newspapers printed in London; Browne certainly sold London newspapers to many Royalist refugees living in The Hague. From at least January 1649 Browne also published a French version of his serial: Le Mercure Anglois.<sup>10</sup> This was a newspaper presented in the French and German style, as a folded pamphlet, and was certainly intended for foreign dignitaries residing in The Hague, as well as for export abroad.

It is uncertain how long Browne maintained the Mercurius Anglo-Britannus. It is likely that he continued to publish his Dutch serial whilst he was also engaged with his French Le Mercure Anglois in 1649. The last known issue of the French serial dates from August 1649, but after this any trace of Browne’s serial ventures disappears. Yet Browne’s publishing career was by no means halted after the execution of King Charles I. Browne’s shop remained a rallying point for Royalist supporters in The Hague and further afield; Browne published at least twelve titles in 1650.<sup>11</sup> With the continuation of the English Civil War in Ireland and Scotland from 1649 until 1651, it seems unlikely that Browne ceased his activities as newsman.

It is possible that Browne may have ended his two British news serials after the crushing defeat of the Royal army at the battle of Worcester in September 1651. At this point Browne also ran into trouble in The Hague. In 1651, after the Commonwealth regime had complained to the States General, the Court of Holland fined Browne 1,000 gulden for the publication of a polemical Royalist pamphlet.<sup>12</sup> Although this sentence was not enforced by the Dutch authorities, it is possible that it led Browne to reassess his business profile. In 1652 he sold off his stock, and in January 1653, with his passions reignited by the First Anglo-Dutch War, Browne started a new Dutch periodical, the Noodig, Continueerlick Acht-Dagen-Nieuws.<sup>13</sup> This newspaper was banned by March 1653, and Browne left for Heidelberg in 1654 or 1655.<sup>14</sup> While Browne’s tenure as publisher in The Hague had lasted only eight years, his influence lasted much longer. From 1652 onwards, The Hague would replace Amsterdam as the most innovative and diverse newspaper centre of the Dutch Republic, with a range of newspapers following in the experimental footsteps of Samuel Browne.

NB.

Both extant issues of the Mercurius Anglo-Britannus were published on Monday. Inferring the issues between issue 4 (of 2 March) and issue 10 (of 20 April) leaves a gap of exactly one week. It is likely that one of the extant issues was misnumbered—issue 11 as ‘10’ or issue 3 as ‘4’. The lost issues of the Mercurius Anglo-Britannus are inferred on the former basis, and as such the extant issue 10 is presumed to be issue 11.

De Bode van Vrancrïck Gouda, 1649

The Dutch newspaper market was highly competitive. This was not the case in France, where newspaper production was closely regulated. Since 1631 the bi-weekly Paris Gazette had enjoyed a monopoly of newspaper publishing throughout the entire country.<sup>1</sup> The Gazette was published by Théophraste Renaudot, court physician and client of Cardinal Richelieu.<sup>2</sup> While the Gazette was not censored by the French court, Renaudot was highly supportive of the monarchy, earning the newspaper a reputation as a vehicle of government. In order to maintain an effective monopoly, Renaudot licensed booksellers in other French cities to reprint the Gazette, ensuring that there was little room for a challenger.

Renaudot's position changed in 1649, at the height of the Fronde. After Cardinal Mazarin, the first minister of state, arrested several leading members of the Parlement of Paris in late 1648, the citizens of the city and remaining members of the Parlement erected barricades and forced the court to flee from the city. As the court escaped from Paris, so did its loyal courrantier, Renaudot. He took with him to Saint-Germain-en-Laye a printing press, with which he published various royal ordinances and news pamphlets.<sup>3</sup> However, publication of the Gazette lapsed. With Renaudot's exile and the suspension of the Gazette, another Parisian publisher took his chance. A new serial was set up in January 1649 by Rolin de la Haye, entitled Le Courier Français.<sup>4</sup> This was a weekly serial, printed as a quarto pamphlet of eight pages. It contained exclusively news from France, highlighting the progress of the civil war between the Frondeurs and the forces of the king. A dozen issues appeared between January and April 1649.

Le Courier Français was reprinted in Rouen and in Paris, but also found an audience further afield. In the Dutch city of Gouda a translation was published by the bookseller and printer Pieter Rammazeyn (fl. 1626–1650). Rammazeyn was a specialist in the publication of mathematical tracts and Bibles, and he also enjoyed lucrative business printing ordinances for the local magistrates. Now, towards the end of his career, he was happy to dabble in the news market.

Rammazeyn's Dutch translation was called De Bode van Vrancrïck (like Le Courier Français: The French Messenger). The Bode van Vrancrïck claimed to be "translated from the French, according to the copies printed each week in Paris." It appeared in an identical style, published as a quarto pamphlet of eight pages. Most of the text was printed in a black letter typeface, rather than the roman typeface of the Parisian original, but the Bode van Vrancrïck was otherwise a precise rendition. A comparison between the French and the Dutch suggests that the translation was accurate; Rammazeyn did not contribute additional commentary of his own, or leave out reports from the original. Each title-page followed the French original closely in wording and design, and apart from the statement of translation and Rammazeyn's imprint, there was no difference between the French and the Dutch edition.

Copies of the Bode van Vrancrïck have survived in four different collections, in Amsterdam, Ghent, Leiden and The Hague. The first three collections consist of issues one through ten, while the Koninklijke Bibliotheek in The Hague also contains the eleventh issue. In each library the issues are bound together; in Amsterdam, Leiden and The Hague the issues are preceded by a separate title-page printed by Rammazeyn. This contains the statement that the Bode van Vrancrïck is "divided into eleven parts". Clearly Rammazeyn never got hold of the twelfth issue published by Rolin de la Haye.

The Bode van Vrancrïck was printed on a weekly basis, rather than as a collective backdated compendia. Each issue was printed with the same signature ("A4"); if all issues had been printed together one would find consecutive signature statements on the gatherings. The fact that three of the collections miss the eleventh issue also hint that the issues were bound together after readers had bought the weekly issues; the separate title-page published by Rammazeyn was printed retrospectively for this purpose also.

One can thus assume that Rammazeyn gathered the issues of Le Courier Français from Paris on a weekly basis, and offered translations for sale in the Dutch Republic as soon as the issues arrived.<sup>5</sup> It seems that Rammazeyn had a particular correspondent or contact in Paris: in the spring of 1649 he also published three news pamphlets on the Fronde, including a treatise published by the Parlement against Cardinal Mazarin and a declaration by Louis XIV calling for a halt to all hostilities in and around the city.<sup>6</sup> By offering a translation of Le Courrier Français Rammazeyn had trumped his rivals in the Dutch news market. The Fronde was covered intensively by a number of bookmen. In The Hague the prolific news publisher Ludolph Breeckvelt published at least eleven different French pamphlets on the Fronde in 1649, and also offered various Dutch translations. In Leiden the brothers Elzevier did likewise; and in Amsterdam the conflict was followed with great interest by the four Amsterdam courantiërs in their weekly newspapers.

The Bode van Vrancrick could only last as long as the Parisian crisis continued. When Paris was captured by the army of the Prince of Condé the court returned to the capital, and the Gazette was reinstated to its former position. With the demise of the Le Courrier Français, the Bode van Vrancrick came to a similar end. It was to be the only news serial to be published in Gouda in the seventeenth century. But it certainly was remembered: the stock catalogues of Johannes Janssonius (I) van Waesberghe (in Utrecht) and Johannes Janssonius (in Amsterdam) offered an unspecified number of copies of the Bode van Vrancrick in 1660 and 1665.<sup>7</sup> The fact that one could still buy a complete set of the issues in bookshops in Utrecht and Amsterdam in the 1660s suggests that Rammazeyn's reproduction of the French serial had created a contemporary chronicle of the Fronde of enduring value.

5 The serial was also advertised in the Ordinarise Middel-weeckse Courante. On 13 April 1649 the Amsterdam bookseller Joseph Bruynigh advertised that he sold copies of the Bode van Vrancrick. ## Wekelycke Nieuws uyt Vranckryck Engelant ende andre Plaetsen The Hague, 1652–1655

The Thirty Years' War was a disaster for the German-speaking populations of Europe, but an undoubted boon for the newspaper industry. Throughout Europe newspapers followed every twist and turn of the momentous conflict between 1618 and 1648. In the Low Countries the Eighty Years' War between the Dutch Republic and the Spanish Habsburgs provided an additional theatre of news, covered eagerly by courantiërs on either side of the border. Both conflicts ended in 1648 with the treaties of Münster and Osnabrück. But new wars erupted elsewhere, and others dragged on, providing opportunities for a new generation of newspapermen. Wars were the sinews of newspaper publishing in the seventeenth century.

It was not long after the treaties of Westphalia before the Dutch Republic was at war again. This time the enemy was across the Channel. The First Anglo-Dutch War (1652–1654) erupted on 29 May 1652 at the battle of Goodwin Sands, after months of political tension between the Republic and the English Commonwealth. For three years naval battles raged across the Channel and the Mediterranean as the two major Republican states of Europe fought for commercial and naval supremacy. This was a conflict unlike any other before it; fought exclusively on open water in chaotic, drawn-out battles featuring over 200 warships. Covering such an extraordinary war posed new challenges to the newspaper industry. Whereas on land news travelled via established routes and arrived at regular intervals at postal offices, maritime news was capricious. Bad winds easily obstructed the passage of ships across the Channel, delaying vital news reports. Ships could aim to come in at Hellevoetsluis near Rotterdam but be swept 180 kilometres up the coast towards Texel, a hard day's riding to bring the news back to Amsterdam. The logistical problems of this new era of war would prove a challenge to many newsmen—but it certainly did not stop them trying.

In April 1652, a month before the eruption of the Anglo-Dutch War, a weekly newspaper was established in The Hague. This was the Wekelycke Nieuws uyt Vranckryck Engelant ende andre Plaetsen. While the English Royalist Samuel Browne had published a topical news serial in The Hague in 1648 and 1649, the Wekelycke Nieuws was the first newspaper to appear in the town.<sup>1</sup> The newspaper was also the first major title to deviate in a fundamental way from the standard set by the Amsterdam newspapers in the first half of the seventeenth century. The Wekelycke Nieuws appeared as a folded pamphlet in quarto, with eight numbered pages (a full sheet of paper). It featured a title-page with a woodcut vignette and a large roman typeface. Compared to the unillustrated and sober double-sided sheets published in Amsterdam, this was a newspaper which to Dutch eyes would have resembled more a topical news pamphlet than a periodical.

The Wekelycke Nieuws may have looked distinctly unlike what the Dutch had come to think of as the normative shape of a newspaper, but its pamphlet form gave it distinct advantages in terms of storage and curation. A total of 155 issues of the Wekelycke Nieuws can be traced in library collections today, close to 80% of the likely total published. Most Dutch newspapers, even papers that were highly successful and admired by contemporaries, do not come close to this survival rate. Most issues are located in the Koninklijke Bibliotheek in The Hague (144 issues). Others can be found in Ghent (thirteen issues) and Stockholm (thirteen issues), and several stray issues are held in Leiden, Amsterdam, Middelburg, Brussels, Wolfenbüttel and Halle. The first two issues of the Wekelycke Nieuws were unnumbered and undated, but the third issue appeared on Friday 26 April 1652; the first issue was probably published a fortnight earlier, on 12 April. The first nine issues were published anonymously; they contained only the note that the issues “are sold in the great hall in ‘de Fortuyn’ (The Fortune)”. The great hall was the Ridderzaal, a large hall in the Binnenhof, the central complex in The Hague which housed the most important offices of state. In the Ridderzaal many booksellers and publishers owned a stall, selling their wares at the heart of government.

The publisher of the Wekelycke Nieuws revealed himself on 13 June 1652, with the publication of issue ten: he was the bookseller and printer Johannes Rammazeyn (c. 1619–1693).<sup>2</sup> Rammazeyn was born in Gouda, where his father, Pieter, was a prominent publisher.<sup>3</sup> The young Johannes most likely learned the ropes in his father's shop. Johannes established his own print shop in Gouda in the mid-1640s, and was responsible for the printing of several Bibles throughout the later 1640s (including one published by his father). After the death of his father Johannes settled in The Hague in 1652, possibly after a short stint as a printer in Den Bosch.<sup>4</sup> In The Hague Johannes Rammazeyn devoted himself to the news trade; beyond the publication of the Wekelycke Nieuws only a couple of short pamphlets are known from Rammazeyn's press in the early 1650s.

Rammazeyn was not an accomplished newspaper publisher. The issues of the Wekelycke Nieuws usually consisted of only three reports: one from Paris, one from London, and one from The Hague. The report from Paris focused on the ongoing civil war between forces of the king and the leading nobles of the country, as well as the continuing Franco-Spanish War; reports from London detailed the state of war in England, and offered an English perspective on the First Anglo-Dutch War. Three times Rammazeyn copied a report from the "London courant", presumably the bi-weekly Mercurius Politicus published by Marchamont Nedham, the leading Commonwealth newsman. The report from The Hague often included reports on the latest decisions and deliberations of the States General and the movement of the Dutch fleet.

Rammazeyn was shrewd to market his newspaper as a vehicle through which readers could gain an overview of the two most important conflicts affecting the Dutch Republic in the early 1650s. But he never managed to cultivate a real news network beyond his correspondents in London and Paris. While there was plenty of interest in news of the Anglo-Dutch War, it was not always easy to furnish reports: bad weather frequently prevented Rammazeyn from publishing a report from London, leaving his Wekelycke Nieuws with a sorry two reports and a statement that "the letters from England have not yet arrived". While Rammazeyn intended to publish on Fridays, the irregularity of his incoming reports meant that he often published on Wednesdays or Thursdays. Furthermore, the pamphlet format was very wasteful. Rammazeyn always published on a full sheet of paper, even if he did not receive a report from London or Paris in time for publication, resulting in several blank pages; as a rule, the first verso was always blank, but the final verso and recto were often empty also. The word count fluctuated greatly, with some issues containing up to 2,000 words, but many others attained scarcely half this number. Compared to the Amsterdam newspapers, which managed to fill a half-sheet of paper with over 2,000 words and five or six times the number of reports as Rammazeyn, the Wekelycke Nieuws offered a relatively meagre news service.

On 27 February 1653, not yet a year after the start of publication, Rammazeyn's name disappeared from the Wekelycke Nieuws. It was still published and sold in the Ridderzaal, and for two months it continued to present each week three news reports from Paris, London and The Hague. The fortunes of the Wekelycke Nieuws changed from 24 April 1653 onwards, with the publication of issue 17 of that year. Rammazeyn's large woodcut vignette, decorated with a fruit basket and two angels, was replaced with a smaller vignette with a rose. Two weeks later, on issue 19, further changes were made. The Wekelycke Nieuws carried reports from Paris, Madrid, Rome, Milan, Venice, Antwerp and The Hague. Over the next two months the newspaper reverted to its original three reports per issue, but from 11 July onwards the newspaper featured seven to ten reports each week. Now the reader of the Wekelycke Nieuws was offered two or three reports from the Italian peninsula (usually from a selection of Venice, Genoa, Turin, Rome or Milan), three or four reports from the Holy Roman Empire (often Danzig, Regensburg, Hamburg, Cologne or the "river Rhine"), and reports from Paris, London, Brussels or Antwerp and The Hague.

The man responsible for this transformation was the scholar Adriaen Vlacq (1600–1667), a printer and bookseller in The Hague since 1650. Like Rammazeyn, Vlacq was from Gouda, where he was born to a mercantile regent family.<sup>5</sup> He enjoyed a humanist education, and was a keen mathematician and astronomer. Vlacq worked in the London book trade for a decade; when the English Civil War broke out he moved to Paris, where he worked for six years. Returning to the Dutch Republic in the later 1640s, he settled in The Hague, where he opened a bookshop and soon acquired a printing press.

By 1652 Vlacq was known more as an author of mathematical tracts than as a publisher; he had been a published author since 1632. Pieter Rammazeyn, the father of Johannes, had printed three works by Vlacq in Gouda in the 1630s. It was this business connection which likely inspired the take-over of the Wekelycke Nieuws in 1653.<sup>6</sup> It is probable that Vlacq acquired Rammazeyn's newspaper together with the right to sell it in the Ridderzaal; the Wekelycke Nieuws continued to be sold in "de Fortuyn" between 1653–1655. Rammazeyn moved shop, and in 1654 could be found on the Singelgracht.<sup>7</sup> On 13 March 1654, with the publication of issue 11 of that year, Vlacq officially revealed himself as publisher on the title-page of the Wekelycke Nieuws.

Thanks to Adriaen Vlacq the quality of the newspaper improved rapidly. Vlacq's international scholarly connections most likely played a part in the development of his network of news correspondents. Vlacq also tried to expand the domestic market for the newspaper. In the collections of the Wekelycke Nieuws in the Koninklijke Bibliotheek in The Hague and the university library in Ghent there are eight variant issues of the newspaper with a very different imprint: "In The Hague, printed for Gillis Joosten, printer in the Nieuwestraat", in Amsterdam.

These eight issues are otherwise identical to the regular issues of the Wekelycke Nieuws. They contain the same news reports and the same woodcut vignette; they were certainly printed in The Hague by Adriaen Vlacq. However, these issues were intended for sale and distribution by Gillis Joosten Saeghman (1619–1704), an Amsterdam bookseller and printer.<sup>8</sup> Saeghman was a prominent publisher, with an expertise in ephemeral, devotional and recreational print, especially almanacs, plays, news pamphlets, and psalms. Selling a variant edition of the Wekelycke Nieuws in Amsterdam was an astute business arrangement. Because the Wekelycke Nieuws was printed in The Hague, Saeghman did not require official permission from the Amsterdam burgomasters to sell the newspaper. In 1654 the burgomasters restructured the newspaper industry in Amsterdam, restricting local production to only two issues published each week. But demand for news in the teeming metropolis was not so easily restrained; the Amsterdam edition of the Wekelycke Nieuws was shrewdly timed to stake a claim to part of this unsatisfied demand. It seems likely that Vlacq printed an Amsterdam edition for Saeghman of every issue of the Wekelycke Nieuws from April 1653 onwards, though since the last known Amsterdam issue dates from 9 January 1654 it is possible that the arrangement was terminated before the Wekelycke Nieuws was closed down in 1655.

Unlike the Amsterdam newspapers, the Wekelycke Nieuws rarely featured any advertisements placed by other booksellers and publishers. The only documented advertisement in the Wekelycke Nieuws appeared on 19 November 1655, when Adriaen Vlacq advertised two religious tracts published by himself.<sup>9</sup> Perhaps the lack of book advertisements, so prominent in the Amsterdam titles, provides an indication of the limited appeal of the Wekelycke Nieuws in other Dutch cities.

While many issues of the Wekelycke Nieuws have survived from 1652, 1653 and 1654, only six issues of the newspaper are known from 1655. Issue 37 from 10 September no longer features Vlacq's name on the title-page—instead the imprint read once again "sold in the great hall in 'de Fortuyn'". Vlacq was re-branding the newspaper: the title was changed to Wekelycke Nieuws Ofte ordinarise Post-Tydingen Verhalende de gedenckweerdigste dingen die geschiet zijn in Engelandt, Vranckrijck, Duytslandt, Spaengien, Italien, ende andere Plaetsen des Wereldts. With the Anglo-Dutch War at an end in 1654, and the reconciliation of the French Frondeurs in 1653, it made little sense to maintain the prominent focus on England and France; Vlacq now offered the reader a regular digest of news from across Europe. As part of the new brand identity Vlacq also featured a woodcut of a postal messenger on horseback on the title-page of the Wekelycke Nieuws.

Vlacq would continue to make changes to the style, format and content of his newspaper, and in January 1656 the Wekelycke Nieuws would be transformed into the bi-weekly Post-tydingen uyt 'sGraven-Hage.<sup>10</sup> One can only speculate why Vlacq removed his name from the imprint of the newspaper in 1655. Perhaps it clashed with his scholarly interests and image—courantiers in the Dutch Republic had to this point been field-reporters and news printers, not scholars or sons of regents. While this would change in the second half of the seventeenth century, Vlacq preferred to maintain his public persona as a mathematician rather than newsman.

Noodig, Continueerlick Acht-Dagen-Nieuws The Hague, 1653

In 1651 the English Civil Wars had come to an effective end with the triumph of the Commonwealth forces at the battle of Worcester. In The Hague, the Royalist publisher Samuel Browne (1611–1665) had ceased the publication of his two weekly serials, the Dutch Mercurius Anglo-Britannus and the French Le Mercure Anglois.<sup>1</sup> Browne was heavily invested in the reinstatement of the Stuart monarchy; since 1647, Browne's print shop had provided a rallying point for Royalists in exile. The two news serials, providing an exclusive focus on the political and military developments taking place on the British Isles, had been made redundant by the collapse of the Royalist cause.

Nevertheless, Browne kept up his spirits and his trade. In 1651 he occupied a stall in the great hall on the Binnenhof, the most prized location for the sale of books in The Hague.<sup>2</sup> The year 1652 brought pleasant tidings for Browne: the Commonwealth was at war with the Dutch Republic. Public support in the Dutch Republic for the Commonwealth was at an all-time low and Browne's publications were well received. When Browne published a short tract in 1653 entitled Hoe veel den Vereenigde Provincien behoort gelegen te zijn, de her-stelling van den coninck van Groot-Britangie (To what extent the United Provinces should strive towards the restoration of the King of Great Britain), he found himself issuing an enlarged second edition shortly afterwards.<sup>3</sup>

Under these auspicious circumstances Browne attempted a return to the newspaper market. With his extensive connections to the English court-in-exile in The Hague, as well as former contacts in England, he was able to invest rapidly in establishing news networks. Browne clearly planned his comeback as courantier very methodically, as the first issue of his periodical appeared at the start of the new year, on Monday 6 January 1653. This was the Noodig, Continueerlick Acht-Dagen-Nieuws, uyt Engelandt, Vrancryck, ende Andere Quartieren, Steden, of Plaetsen (Necessary, continuous eight-day-news, from England, France and other quarters, cities or places), published as a quarto pamphlet of eight pages (a full sheet of paper).

Browne ensured that his return to the newspaper trade did not go unannounced. The first four issues of this periodical carried a preface in which Browne outlined what the reader could expect from his new venture:

Given that there are many things waiting to be brought to light, which the other newspapers neglect to mention, regarding the affairs between the States General and the ruling party in England, so I have decided to enlighten you and show you some of this [information] every Monday, of which you will find nothing, or very few things, which the others [newspapers] have.<sup>4</sup>

Unlike in 1648 and 1649, when Browne was the only serial news publisher in The Hague, he now had local competition. The weekly Wekelycke Nieuws uyt Vrancryck Engelandt ende andre Plaetsen had appeared in April 1652.<sup>5</sup> This was a newspaper focused largely on the Anglo-Dutch War and the French Fronde, providing a formidable rival to Browne's new paper. The Acht-Dagen-Nieuws mirrored the title, focus and appearance of the Wekelycke Nieuws; editorial details unlikely to have escaped the customers of either newspaper.

In order to ease competition in The Hague, Browne published his Acht-Dagen Nieuws on Mondays, four days before the Wekelycke Nieuws. This shrewd scheduling also ensured that Browne was able to compete with the two Tuesday papers published in Amsterdam, the Ordinarise Middel-weeckse Courante of Sara Vlamincq and the Ordinaris Dingsdaegsche Courante of Willemijntje Broersz.<sup>6</sup>

Browne did not exaggerate when he claimed that the Acht-Dagen-Nieuws provided news reports which "the others" did not publish. While the Wekelycke Nieuws usually published only one news report from London each week, Browne's extensive contacts in the British Isles ensured that he could fill his issues with a wide variety of British news. The first three issues, published in the usually barren winter month of January, contained reports from Dublin, Portsmouth, the Isle of Wight, Cornwall, Westminster, Deal, Galloway, Kinsale, Edinburgh and London. Later issues also included news from Falmouth, Dalkeith, Cork, Dover, Plymouth and Leith. Undoubtedly, the First Anglo-Dutch War provided the staple of news for the Acht-Dagen-Nieuws. It was only when a Zeeland privateer intercepted Browne's letters that he was unable to publish any British news in an issue of his paper; he duly offered his customers an apology at the start of the fourth issue of 27 January.<sup>7</sup>

Browne's determined focus on Britain does not mean we should exclude his second Dutch periodical from consideration as a true newspaper.<sup>8</sup> Unlike the Mercurius Anglo-Britannus or Le Mercure Anglois, the Acht-Dagen-Nieuws also regularly featured reports from Venice and Cologne, and other cities in France, the Holy Roman Empire and the Low Countries. It was clear to Browne that with heightened competition in the Dutch news market it made sense to offer a greater diversity of news. The tone of his newspaper remained frankly Royalist: in a report from London of 27 December 1652 he related that upon the passing of the English and Dutch fleets at their last encounter, the English sailors were reluctant to fight, shouting instead "For God, and King Charles."<sup>9</sup>

Browne's return as courrantier certainly caught the attention of the local authorities in The Hague. The First Anglo-Dutch War was largely unwelcome, and the Dutch suffered extensive commercial losses to English privateering. On 4 January 1651 the States General issued an ordinance prohibiting publications debating the constitutions of foreign states and governments, in an attempt to maintain a neutral stance towards foreign powers.<sup>10</sup> This ordinance did not stop the flow of criticism of the English Commonwealth emanating from Dutch printing presses, but it did empower the Dutch authorities to target particular entrepreneurs whose reports might undermine their efforts in the anticipated peace negotiations.

It seems that Browne's Acht-Dagen-Nieuws became a victim of this political atmosphere, and that his newspaper was banned, or at least obstructed, by the authorities in The Hague.<sup>11</sup> The first thirteen issues of the Acht-Dagen-Nieuws can be found in the university library in Ghent, but the final copy in this collection bears an annotation in a seventeenth-century hand that "this is the last [issue] that was printed before it was prohibited."

After the publication of his final periodical Browne left The Hague within the next two years, only to return in 1660 after a stint as the university printer at Heidelberg. Upon his return he must have witnessed the jubilant mood surrounding the restoration of King Charles II, who departed from the Dutch Republic to take up his crown in England. In May of that year Browne petitioned the restored king for financial compensation for his extensive troubles in exile, and duly returned to London.<sup>12</sup> He died in London in August 1665 of the plague, with his native country once again at war with the Dutch.

Wekelycke Mercurius The Hague, 1654

1654 was an important year for the Dutch newspaper trade. The Amsterdam burgomasters introduced regulations which forced the four Amsterdam newspaper publishers to alternate publication. Instead of four weekly issues (two on Tuesday and two on Saturday) now only two issues appeared each week (one on Tuesday and one on Saturday).<sup>1</sup> This change offered opportunities to new entrepreneurs who would establish newspapers during the next two decades in The Hague, Haarlem, Weesp, Utrecht and Rotterdam. They too could now compete in a national market for periodical news. But 1654 was also the year in which the most dynamic and controversial courantier of the seventeenth-century Dutch Republic, Gerard Lodewijk van der Macht (c. 1622–1698), published his first newspaper. Van der Macht was born in Ghent.<sup>2</sup> He belonged to the lesser nobility, styling himself “Lord of Maldegommerstraet, ter Clock, Oxelaer and St Aldegonde”. In 1646 Van der Macht married in The Hague, and lodged in the grand manor of Westerbeek, located on the outskirts of the town. Between 1654 and 1669 Van der Macht would be responsible for the publication of five newspapers and a topical news serial in The Hague and Utrecht—almost all of which would ultimately be banned. He attracted controversy wherever he went, but his publications were popular and his editorial ingenuity unrivalled. In many ways Gerard Lodewijk van der Macht was an heir to the editorial styles of Abraham Verhoeven (1575–1652); like his predecessors, Van der Macht was a courantier who would fundamentally reshape the newspaper industry.<sup>3</sup>

Van der Macht’s first periodical venture appeared on Friday 22 May 1654, under the title Wekelycke Mercurius van alle het gedenckwaerdigste dat door geheel Europa passeert (Weekly Mercury of all the memorable affairs occurring throughout Europe). The second issue was published two weeks later, on Friday 5 June; thereafter the newspaper appeared on a weekly basis. The last known issue is number thirteen, published on 21 August.

The design and format of the Wekelycke Mercurius deviated significantly from the standard format of most Dutch newspapers. All issues were published on two sheets of paper in quarto, for a total of sixteen pages. Successive issues were paginated and signed consecutively, emphasising that the issues were to be bound together at the end of the year. Not every page contained news reports: the newspaper featured a title-page, and the first verso and sometimes the final verso and the recto were also left blank. Rather than imitate the established Amsterdam weeklies, Van der Macht took his inspiration from the pamphlet newspapers of France, England and the Holy Roman Empire, and also pioneered by Johannes Rammazeyn, Adriaen Vlacq and Samuel Browne in The Hague in 1652 and 1653.<sup>4</sup> The use of the word “Mercury” harked back to the publications of the controversial Browne, as well as the newsbooks of the English Civil Wars, rather than the ubiquitous “Courant” of the Amsterdam newspapers.

This was not the only respect in which Van der Macht’s paper represented a breath of fresh air in the newspaper market. In 1654, one could find four fortnightly newspapers in Amsterdam, both featuring around eleven to fourteen news reports per issue. In The Hague, Adriaen Vlacq published the Wekelyke Nieuws; printed on one sheet of paper, it contained only seven to nine reports. Van der Macht’s Wekelycke Mercurius featured an extraordinary average of twenty-eight news reports per issue. Van der Macht published three to four times the number of reports than Vlacq with double the quantity of paper.

The Wekelycke Mercurius was more wasteful in its use of paper than the Amsterdam newspapers, especially because of its blank pages and title-page. However, Van der Macht aspired to a new standard of newspaper publication in the Dutch Republic. The Amsterdam newspapers were sober publications: thin, fragile sheets filled to the brim with news reports. The Wekelycke Mercurius was an aesthetically-pleasing booklet: the news reports were set in centred columns in a black letter typeface, and headed by large cursive or roman datelines. Ample white space separated the news reports, guiding the reader through the newspaper. Van der Macht demonstrated to Dutch readers that the newspaper could be an elegant product.

Van der Macht’s most impressive quality was the range of his network of correspondents. With an average of twenty-eight reports in each issue Van der Macht presented news from across the breadth of Europe. Whereas most courantiërs developed editorial specialities, focusing on one or two news networks, Van der Macht aspired to cover half a dozen. The issues of the Wekelycke Mercurius commonly opened with news from Constantinople or the Eastern Mediterranean (Cyprus, Heraklion or Malta), locations which rarely feature in other newspapers of the 1650s. Then followed a range of cities in the Italian Peninsula (Naples, Rome, Venice, Milan, Genoa and Turin); followed sometimes by a report from Spain; then a combination of reports from Britain and France. Van der Macht's French sources were extremely good, and he covered the engagements between French and Spanish armies in the latter stages of the Franco-Spanish war in minute detail. Van der Macht introduced his readers to a range of French provincial cities that seldom feature in the datelines of other Dutch papers: Rheims, Stenay (in Lorraine), Perpignan, Compiègne, Arras, Saint-Quentin, Soissons, Rethel and many others. Most issues of the Wekelycke Mercurius included reports from one or several French armies on the move, and it seems likely that Van der Macht had one or two correspondents embedded with the French troops.

After reports from Britain and France Van der Macht always included several major German, Polish and Scandinavian reports (Stockholm, Hamburg, Warsaw, Vienna), before closing with several reports from the Low Countries, always ending with The Hague. What is most remarkable of this range of sources is their consistency: the range and quantity does not fluctuate, and Van der Macht kept up a steady stream of news. Starting a newspaper in summer, when roads were dry and the armies of Europe were on campaign, provided a clear benefit in maintaining regular news reports.

How did Van der Macht get hold of all this news? Van der Macht devoted his time to his news writing and correspondence, and was not responsible for other pamphlets at this stage in his career. His relative affluence afforded him some security. Living in The Hague, Van der Macht was in close proximity to the centre of politics in the Dutch Republic; here he would find the great offices of state, where one could easily pick up the latest gossip, or establish new business relations with foreign dignitaries. Van der Macht also seems to have paid clerks of the secretariat of the Court of Holland for more exclusive or classified news; a habit which would cause him considerable trouble later in his career.<sup>5</sup>

It was this surreptitious news gathering which forced Van der Macht to remain in the shadows as courantiër. Van der Macht's name was nowhere to be found on any of the issues of the Wekelycke Mercurius; none of his newspapers would ever bear his real name. One can nevertheless be sure that Van der Macht was behind the publication of the Wekelycke Mercurius: the editorial style, news reports, lay-out and title bear very close resemblance to his later ventures in The Hague and Utrecht.

The title-page of the Wekelycke Mercurius stated that it was printed in The Hague on the Singelgracht by Johannes Rammazeyn (c. 1619–1693). This was the same Rammazeyn who had started the Wekelycke Nieuws in The Hague in 1652, and which had been taken over by Adriaen Vlacq in 1653. Rammazeyn had not been a successful courantiër: although he tried to exploit the demand for news generated by the French Fronde and the First Anglo-Dutch War (1652–1654) he failed to present more than a few reports each week in his Wekelycke Nieuws. Now Rammazeyn returned to the newspaper trade, albeit as printer and seller of a newspaper rather than as its publisher: a role more suited to his talents.

No advertisements or public announcements are found in the surviving issues of the Wekelycke Mercurius. Perhaps there was too little time for the newspaper to appeal to potential advertisers: it was already banned by mid-August.<sup>6</sup> Issues twelve and thirteen no longer feature Rammazeyn's imprint, stating only that they were "printed in the year of our Lord". Exactly as in the case of Browne's Acht-Dagen-Nieuws, the collection of the Wekelycke Mercurius in the university library in Ghent contains a seventeenth-century annotation on the final issue that "This is the last [issue] to be printed before it was prohibited".<sup>7</sup>

With the end of the newspaper Van der Macht and Rammazeyn went their separate ways. Van der Macht, thirty-two or thirty-three years old, was at the beginning of a dynamic career: within a fortnight he would start a new weekly periodical as well as a topical news pamphlet serial. His first experiences as a courantiër would provide great inspiration for his future ventures. Rammazeyn remained a printer and publisher until the later 1670s.<sup>8</sup> Throughout this time he was responsible for many news pamphlets and devotional tracts; he also maintained ambitions to re-enter the newspaper trade, despite his earlier failures. When Adriaen Vlacq died in 1667, Rammazeyn petitioned the magistrates of The Hague to publish his bi-weekly Haegse Post-Tydingen.<sup>9</sup> This request was denied, and the newspaper was taken over by Crispijn Hoeckwater. Instead, Rammazeyn was allowed to publish the first French newspaper in The Hague, the Gazette de la Haye, which he started in July 1667.<sup>10</sup> The only extant example of this newspaper is now lost. It is unlikely that it lasted for many years, given Rammazeyn's frequent money troubles—in 1675 he was indebted to his son for the sum of 2,382 gulden.<sup>11</sup>

Johannes Rammazeyn certainly never stopped trying to make a mark on the Dutch newspaper trade. But rather than his individual efforts, his greatest contribution was to assist Gerard Lodewijk van der Macht at the start of his prolific career as courantier in the summer of 1654.

Haegsche Weekelycke Mercurius (I)

The Hague, 1654–1655

In the summer of 1654 the courantier Gerard Lodewijk van der Macht (c. 1622–1698) was looking for a new printer. His first newspaper, the Wekelycke Mercurius, had been banned by mid-August. Printed by Johannes Rammazeyn (a former newspaper publisher himself), the Wekelycke Mercurius last appeared on 21 August.<sup>1</sup> While some newspaper publishers would have taken a prohibition by the local authorities as a warning not to test the waters again, Van der Macht was made of sterner stuff. Within a fortnight he had inaugurated another weekly newspaper in The Hague, this time printed by Willem Breeckvelt (c. 1625–?).

The new periodical first appeared on Friday 4 September 1654, exactly two weeks after the demise of the Wekelycke Mercurius. It was initially called the Haegsche Weekelycke Mercurius, but from 13 November it was entitled Haegsche Weekelycke Mercurius, van alle het gedenckwaerdigste dat'er in gantsch Europa passeert (Weekly Mercury from The Hague of all the memorable affairs occurring throughout Europe). The similarity with the title of the Wekelycke Mercurius was striking; Van der Macht clearly intended the new venture as a continuation of his previous efforts. One can presume that his former subscribers were quickly notified of the new title.

Van der Macht had not revealed himself as publisher of the Wekelycke Mercurius: this anonymity provided him with a degree of concealment, and Van der Macht maintained similar anonymity on his new venture as well. The only name to be found on the newspaper was that of printer and bookseller Willem Breeckvelt. In his new business partner Van der Macht had found another controversial newsman. Willem Breeckvelt, born around 1625, was the second son of Ludolph Breeckvelt (fl. 1630–1649), one of the most prolific news publishers in The Hague in the first half of the seventeenth century.<sup>2</sup> Ludolph and Willem both supplied the Court of Holland and the States General with news pamphlets and other books; Willem most likely first assisted in his father's print shop, before opening his own premises in 1650.

Willem very quickly ran into trouble: in the summer of 1650 he was responsible, together with his brother

Johannes, for the printing of a pamphlet entitled Articulen geslooten ende geaccordeert tusschen de Republijcque van Engelandt en de stadt Amsterdam (Articles signed and ratified between the Republic of England and the city of Amsterdam).<sup>3</sup> This purported to detail the conditions of an alliance signed in secret between the magistrates of Amsterdam and the English Commonwealth, promising English military assistance to aid the overthrow of the Prince of Orange. Unwisely, Willem had visited Amsterdam after printing the slanderous text, and boasted about it after a long night's drinking. He was arrested, tortured, and pilloried in The Hague.<sup>4</sup> He was also banned from the book trade for twenty-five years, but this ban was never enforced, and Willem was once again delivering books to the States General in 1651.<sup>5</sup>

In 1654 Willem Breeckvelt was living in De Poten next to the "Bibel" (Bible). Here he printed and sold the Haegsche Weekelycke Mercurius for the next year. Twenty-one issues of the newspaper have survived, published between 4 September 1654 and 18 June 1655 (seventeen from 1654 and four from 1655). Almost all extant issues can be found in the university library in Ghent, along with the issues of the Wekelycke Mercurius, but some issues are also present in The Hague and Wolfenbüttel. The Haegsche Weekelycke Mercurius closely resembled the Wekelycke Mercurius. The newspaper still appeared weekly on Fridays; it was printed as a folded pamphlet in quarto, and paginated and signed consecutively. Nevertheless, Van der Macht made a few editorial changes. The Haegsche Weekelycke Mercurius was printed on one sheet of paper only (a pamphlet of eight pages), rather than two sheets (sixteen pages), thus halving the costs of paper in the production of the newspaper.

This change in size posed a dilemma: how could Van der Macht accommodate his characteristically large number of news reports in a smaller newspaper? The total number of reports did decrease, but Van der Macht still managed to include an average of twenty-two reports in the issues of the Haegsche Weekelycke Mercurius (as opposed to twenty-eight in the Wekelycke Mercurius). In order to use the paper more efficiently, there was no white space between news reports, and the large cursive and roman datelines used in the Wekelycke Mercurius were replaced by more modest headers. The aesthetic luxuries of Van der Macht's first newspaper gave way to the harsh financial realities of newspaper publication. But with these changes Van der Macht was able to maintain his established news networks, and continue to present a large variety of reports from Constantinople, the Italian Peninsula, France, Britain, the Holy Roman Empire and the Low Countries.

The first paid public announcement was placed in the Haegsche Weekelycke Mercurius on 18 December 1654, a clear sign that the newspaper was gaining wider recognition.<sup>6</sup> Another was placed the following week, together with an advertisement for a publication by Van der Macht himself (a political review of the states of Europe for the year 1654).<sup>7</sup> The first ten issues of the Haegsche Weekelycke Mercurius in 1654 did not feature a title-page, but one was introduced on issue eleven from 13 November. The four surviving issues from 1655 carried a woodcut of a rising phoenix on the title-page; undoubtedly a reference to the successful resurrection of Van der Macht's venture. This symbolism was somewhat ironic; by the summer of 1655, less than a year after its establishment, the Haegsche Weekelycke Mercurius was no more.

The final known issue is dated from 18 June 1655. Like its predecessor, the newspaper was banned, sometime in June or early July 1655.<sup>8</sup> It is difficult to state why the newspaper was prohibited, but it is likely to have concerned the ways in which Van der Macht came by his news.<sup>9</sup> After the summer of 1655 all sign of Willem Breeckvelt disappears, and it is probable that he left the book trade or passed away. Even now that he had exhausted two printers, Gerard Lodewijk van der Macht was anything but finished. By the end of July he had launched his next venture (also entitled the Haegsche Weekelycke Mercurius) with new business partners and an altogether more revolutionary format. The phoenix had risen again, to live a little longer this time.

Issues 4 of 1654 and 24 of 1655 were published on Saturdays rather than Fridays.

Unnamed news serial venture in The Hague The Hague, 1654

September 1654 proved a busy month for Gerard Lodewijk van der Macht (c. 1622–1698) and Willem Breeckvelt (c. 1625–?). The two newsmen had joined forces on Friday 4 September, when Breeckvelt printed the first issue of Van der Macht's Haegsche Weekelycke Mercurius.<sup>1</sup> The following week, the two entrepreneurs established a complementary venture: a topical pamphlet serial.

The earliest surviving example of this news serial was published on Friday 11 September, the same day as the second issue of the Haegsche Weekelycke Mercurius. The news serial was a four-page quarto pamphlet (a half-sheet), entitled Numero 2. Extract, uyt een missive, geschreven uyt Batavia, in Oost-Indien, over gekomen met de leste Retour-Schepen (Number 2. Extract from a letter written from Batavia, in the East Indies, which arrived with the latest convoy). This pamphlet contained a short letter detailing the poor state of the Dutch United East India Company (VOC) during the First Anglo-Dutch War (1652–1654), which had come to an end in April.

In the course of September 1654 at least three similar quarto pamphlets were printed by Breeckvelt. These were numbered and signed consecutively, clearly establishing this as an attempt at seriality. Issue three was published on 13 September; issue four on 16 September, and issue five on 19 September. The first topical pamphlet in the series is now lost. All surviving issues featured an individual title-page, and a single news story. The third issue presented a list of casualties after the relief of Arras by Marshal Turenne; the fourth issue reported on the conquest of Stenay by French forces; and the fifth issue detailed the conditions and articles of the Treaty of Ambon, signed between the VOC and the English East India Company on 9 September.

This was the first time that a topical news serial had been published in the Dutch Republic. The format of the series was quite unlike other news publications available at the time. Newspapers, on the whole, featured short reports and redacted accounts from news events across Europe; topical news pamphlets focused on a single event but appeared at irregular intervals; and annual or semi-annual historical reviews gathered together a coherent narrative of developments over several months.<sup>2</sup> Van der Macht's new topical news serial presented a blend of all three forms: each issue presented an individual news story, and the separate issues, which appeared at undetermined but regular intervals, could be sold both separately and collectively. In many ways, the format was influenced by the serial established by Abraham Verhoeven in Antwerp in the 1620s, which also combined the functions of the news pamphlet with the periodicity of the newspaper.<sup>3</sup>

While his name does not feature on any of the pamphlets, one can detect van der Macht's influence in the publication of this innovative news serial. The publisher would embark on his most successful venture in The Hague in the autumn of 1655, when he started a newspaper interspersed with irregular topical news pamphlets.<sup>4</sup> It seemed that in September 1654 he was experimenting with the format of the topical news pamphlet; he was, for the first time, giving shape to the concept of a topical news serial, testing the waters with a new genre.

While certainly innovative, it seems that Van der Macht was not content for long with this new format. The four issues of September 1654 are the only extant examples of this additional venture. The newspaper printed by Breeckvelt for Van der Macht lasted until July 1655, but it seems that the news serial in this form was only a brief experiment. Breeckvelt continued to print short news pamphlets throughout the autumn and winter of 1654, in similar typographical design to the issues of the news serial, but these items were unnumbered and not signed consecutively.<sup>5</sup> The appearance of this brief attempt at serialisation pays tribute to the dynamic and challenging conditions of the news market in the seventeenth century.

Haegsche Weekelycke Mercurius (II) The Hague, 1655–1658

By the summer of 1655 the courantier Gerard Lodewijk van der Macht (c. 1622–1698) had published two newspapers and a short news serial in The Hague.<sup>1</sup> His most recent venture, the Haegsche Weekelycke Mercurius, had been banned at the start of July. Yet within several weeks of this setback Van der Macht embarked on his most distinctive and creative venture, which he would sustain in The Hague for the next two and a half years. This periodical represents the most impressive manifestation of Van der Macht's extraordinary talent for news gathering, editorial flair and entrepreneurial spirit.<sup>2</sup>

The title of Van der Macht's new venture indicated that little had changed: the courantier gave it the same name as his previous newspaper, the Haegsche Weekelycke Mercurius. But Van der Macht made radical changes to the presentation, content and periodicity of the newspaper. Crucially, he also made new arrangements for production and distribution. His last newspaper had been printed by Willem Breeckvelt, a news specialist who was all too familiar to the local authorities after he produced seditious pamphlets during the conflict between Amsterdam and the Prince of Orange in 1650.<sup>3</sup> For his new venture Van der Macht turned to two colleagues in the book trade. The courantier made a contract with the art dealer and bookseller Hendrik (II) Hondius (1615–1677), who was responsible for the sale and distribution of the newspaper.<sup>4</sup> Van der Macht would deliver the printed copies to Hondius, who would pay Van der Macht half a stuiver for each copy he received. Hondius would then sell each issue at two stuivers; the revenue would be split equally between Van der Macht and Hondius. The printing of the Haegsche Weekelycke Mercurius was delegated to the jobbing printer and compositor Christianus Calaminus (fl. 1632–1658): Van der Macht presumably paid Calaminus out of the income he received from Hondius.<sup>5</sup> Like his other periodical ventures, Van der Macht did not place his name on his newspaper: the Haegsche Weekelycke Mercurius stated that it was printed by Calaminus "for the author", and sold by Hondius at his shop in the Hofstraat.

At two stuivers the Haegsche Weekelycke Mercurius was double the price of the weekly newspapers sold in Amsterdam. But for their two stuivers the readers of the Haegsche Weekelycke Mercurius received an extraordinary quantity of news. Van der Macht had built up an extensive network of correspondents during several years as a news writer in The Hague. While his local rival, the bi-weekly Post-tydingen of mathematician Adriaen Vlacq, offered its readers around seven or eight reports each issue, Van der Macht always presented at least twenty reports.<sup>6</sup> These reports were gathered from across the entire breadth of Europe; it was one of Van der Macht's trademarks to open with a report from Constantinople, followed by half a dozen other Mediterranean reports. This was a quality of news gathering which few newsmen in the Low Countries could match. If there was a region in Europe where news was to be made, Van der Macht would establish access to it and present it to his readers in the Dutch Republic. The consistency and reliability of Van der Macht's news network was impressive—the fluctuations across winter and summer which one finds in other ventures do not seem to have affected Van der Macht as severely.

The quality of Van der Macht's news coverage was not only based on an efficient and widespread network of correspondents. Van der Macht was known to frequent the offices of state in the Binnenhof, where he maintained financial relationships with clerks and secretaries to gain access to the latest letters, memoranda and resolutions passed around the government complex. Furthermore, Van der Macht was not averse to the publication of unconfirmed rumours: most newspaper issues published by Van der Macht ended with a report from The Hague, which the courantier usually composed by stringing together half a dozen sentences of hearsay, gossip and political chatter—

5 Little is known about Christianus Calaminus. The archives of the Museum Plantin-Moretus in Antwerp list a Christianus Calaminus from Wittenberg active as a compositor in the Plantin-Moretus firm from 1614–1619 (see Arch. 785, Ouvriers 1610–1622, ff. 71, 108); the Leiden city archives detail the marriage of Calaminus on 11 November 1632, when he was stated to be a compositor in the city (see Erfgoed Leiden, Doop-, trouw- en begraafboeken Leiden (1004), 10, K-307v). See also Kossmann, Boekhandel, p. 64 and Keblusek, Boeken in de Hofstad, p. 94.

with little regard for their truthfulness. Van der Macht did whatever he could to present the freshest news—but he was more concerned with providing a large quantity of news, rather than evaluating its accuracy.

The first issue of the new Haegsche Weekelycke Mercurius appeared on 25 July 1655. This was not a usual newspaper issue. The issue was presented as a twelve-page pamphlet in quarto, and it was entitled Numero 1. D'overwinninge van Landrecy, door de Wapenen van den Alder-Christelijckxsten Koninck Louis den XIV. (Number 1. The conquest of Landrecies, by the army of the Most Christian King Louis XIV). It detailed in one lengthy report one of the latest victories of the French in their struggle against the Spanish Habsburgs.

Apart from the conspicuous numbering at the top of the title-page, this has all the normal features of a traditional news pamphlet, discussing a single news event, rather than a newspaper, which featured a gathering of news reports from across Europe. Topical printed news pamphlets could be traced back to the dawn of printing in the fifteenth century, and this form was a standard product of the European news market. Van der Macht had experimented with the serialisation of topical news pamphlets before; in 1654 he briefly published a numbered news serial which contained exclusively topical news pamphlets.<sup>7</sup>

What Van der Macht did next, however, was to complement the publication of these numbered topical pamphlets with a regular newspaper issued on Fridays, which contained the usual vast array of news reports gathered by Van der Macht. The regular Friday issues were composed of eight pages in quarto, and featured a title-page, usually bearing the woodcut of a flying Mercury. The entire corpus, including regular issues and the single-subject topical pamphlets, was numbered, signed and paginated in one consecutive series. As a newspaper, the Haegsche Weekelycke Mercurius offered the subscriber a new reading experience: a general overview of political developments, complemented by more detailed analysis of specific events.

The single-subject issues published by Van der Macht touched on a wealth of topics. They often concerned ordinances or edicts published by foreign authorities; others took the form of letters or remonstrances exchanged between potentates or generals; or accounts of battles and lists of prisoners and casualties. On one occasion Van der Macht also devoted a topical issue to an account of a local mystery: in this case, a devilish “cat-dance”, which was supposed to have taken place at the graveyard of the church in Katwijk, close to Leiden.<sup>8</sup> This tale of magic and witchcraft followed an established tradition of demonological news pamphlets, but this was a subject that was not often touched upon in the periodical press. The topical issues of the Haegsche Weekelycke Mercurius varied in size: most were composed of four or eight pages, but others ran up to twenty pages.

Just over 200 issues of the Haegsche Weekelycke Mercurius (including two variants) have survived. While the majority of regular newspaper issues are found only in a single copy in Wolfenbüttel, The Hague, or Amsterdam, many topical issues of the periodical can be located in three or more copies across a wide range of libraries and archives.<sup>9</sup> Issue 41 of November 1657, regarding the peace signed between the city and Bishop of Münster, has survived in an extraordinary nine issues—a most unusual survival rate for what is otherwise an ephemeral genre.<sup>10</sup> The impressive rate of survival of Van der Macht's single-subject pamphlets suggests that these publications quickly found their way into contemporary collections: they were regarded not only as news, but also as future reference texts. The similarity between the topical issues of the Haegsche Weekelycke Mercurius and ordinary topical news pamphlets is also likely to have played a role in the conservation of these issues, allowing many to be collected as stand-alone publications in Sammelbände rather than as part of a serial.

Around a quarter of Van der Macht's surviving issues featured an advertisement or a public announcement. This was certainly not as many as the Amsterdam newspapers of the 1650s, which included advertisements in nearly every single issue, but it was a notable development for the periodical press in The Hague, which had thus far barely featured any—Van der Macht's local rival, Adriaen Vlacq, could not attract regular advertisers. Most of Van der Macht's book advertisements were placed by the courantier himself, highlighting forthcoming topical pamphlets.<sup>11</sup> There was also space for Hendrik Hondius, the vendor of the newspaper, to advertise his publications.<sup>12</sup> However, the newspaper did include a large variety of public announcements, mostly placed by municipal authorities or notable individuals. Appeals regarding the loss of high-value bonds or jewellery appeared frequently, confirming that Van der Macht's readership throughout the Dutch Republic was largely composed of a wealthier clientele who could afford to pay two stuivers per issue.<sup>13</sup> On 26 July 1657 Van der Macht himself placed an appeal to his readers.<sup>14</sup> He warned them that a malicious printer had published a news pamphlet using the name of Van der Macht's printer, Christianus Calaminus; this unidentified culprit sought to take advantage of Van der Macht's brand. The courantier offered a reward of 100 gulden—a sizeable sum—for any information regarding the imitator.

The Haegsche Weekelycke Mercurius was in constant transformation. Van der Macht strikes one as a impatient individual; he was always in search of additional features, new styles or structures. The first change came at the start of 1656, when Van der Macht added a supplementary issue to the Haegsche Weekelycke Mercurius. Instead of offering only a weekly newspaper issue of eight pages, the courantier now added a four-page issue every Tuesday. These shorter issues did not feature a title-page, but included only the simple header Advysen (Advices, derived from "Avvisi"). The Advysen, although half the size of the regular Friday issues, still contained an impressive range of sources, and usually featured around fifteen reports. In the autumn of 1656 Van der Macht changed the dates of publication from Tuesdays and Fridays to Mondays (for the Advysen) and Thursdays (for the larger issues). More than twenty topical news pamphlets continued to intersperse this bi-weekly schedule of publication throughout the year.

On 14, 18 and 21 December 1656 Van der Macht placed an advertisement in the Haegsche Weekelycke Mercurius to announce the next change:

The author [Van der Macht] has received requests from reputable persons and officers of state to publish the Advysen in quarto on a full sheet, while at the same time publishing the Mercurius. He has agreed to do so, but no longer with the title of Advysen, but with the title of Mercurius: therefore he gives notice to all curious readers that with the commencement of the year 1657 there will be published a Maendaechschen and a Donderdaechschen Mercurius, both in quarto, which will be much improved, and will not withhold any news from the reader, given all the wars, wonders and other strange occurrences taking place throughout Europe.<sup>15</sup>

Van der Macht followed through on the promise to his readers. From January 1657 there appeared two eight-page issues of the Haegsche Weekelycke Mercurius each week, on Mondays and Thursdays.<sup>16</sup> Throughout the year Van der Macht supplemented the bi-weekly with at least another fifteen topical news pamphlets. The courantier made another noteworthy change: at the start of July, when he had published the first fifty issues, Van der Macht restarted the numbering sequence of the series, publishing another sixty issues before the end of December. This modification went without any explanation.

Towards the end of 1657 Van der Macht's luck was finally running out. The Court of Holland had started an investigation in September into several corrupt clerks of the Court. These clerks regularly supplied Van der Macht with documents for an unspecified financial subsidy.<sup>17</sup> Van der Macht knew that the authorities were on his heels, and from the autumn of 1657 the surviving issues of the Haegsche Weekelycke Mercurius betray a restless character. First Van der Macht began to withhold the date of publication and the imprint from the newspaper. On 24 and 27 December he changed the imprint to read that the newspaper was printed by "Antoni Benedetti".<sup>18</sup> At the start of 1658 he altered this pseudonym to "Anthoni Pieters".

Van der Macht published another twenty-seven issues in 1658. He missed publication on Thursday 28 February due to an illness, for which he apologised in the next issue, published on 4 March.<sup>19</sup> The final issue appeared on Thursday 4 April, because the following day the Court of Holland sentenced Van der Macht to be banished from the provinces of Holland, Zeeland and Friesland for a period of ten years.<sup>20</sup> The Court convicted Van der Macht of the fabrication of a news report; of committing perjury during the Court's investigation; and of printing a secret accord between the King of Poland and the Elector of Brandenburg. There was no mention of bribed clerks—the Court evidently did not wish to damage its reputation in public, but found other offences for which they could condemn Van der Macht.

The courantier was required to leave The Hague within twenty-four hours, and the province of Holland within another three days. Van der Macht, not yet forty years old, did not sit still for long. The courantier moved to Utrecht, only a day's travel from The Hague, where he swiftly set up several new periodical ventures.<sup>21</sup> For the next twelve years Van der Macht would continue his activities from Utrecht, despatching his bi-weekly newspaper to his former seller Hondius—but also to a range of other publishers and booksellers in The Hague. The Court of Holland managed to expel Van der Macht from The Hague, but they could not prevent the dissemination of his new Mercurius. Eventually they would get hold of him again, this time for Van der Macht's anonymous polemical attacks on the De Witt regime.<sup>22</sup>

The Court's sentence of 5 April 1658 was the first banishment passed against a newspaper publisher in the Dutch Republic. It took a repeat offender like Van der Macht, a talented but reckless courantier, to test the boundaries of censorship in the Dutch Republic.

Courante uyt Italien ende Duytschlant, &c. Weesp, 1656–1660

Jan van Hilten (c. 1602–1655), the Amsterdam courantier, died in late November 1655. He was buried in the Nieuwe Kerk on 22 November.<sup>1</sup> Publication of his newspaper continued, and the next two extant issues of his Courante uyt Italien, Duytslandt, &c., dated from 18 December 1655 and 1 January 1656, were published at “the printing house of the late Jan van Hilten”.<sup>2</sup> Around three weeks after Jan van Hilten’s passing the future of his newspaper had been formally settled. On 10 December the burgomasters of Amsterdam appointed the printer-publisher Otto Barentsz Smient (1614–1689) as the courantier of the Courante uyt Italien in succession to Van Hilten.<sup>3</sup>

The remaining members of the Van Hilten family were not pleased by this decision. Nicolaes Jacobsz (c. 1631–?), a son-in-law of Jan van Hilten, regarded himself as the obvious successor.<sup>4</sup> Jacobsz, a twenty-four year old bookseller in Amsterdam, had married Jan van Hilten’s daughter Celia on 3 September 1655.<sup>5</sup> Jan van Hilten’s wife had died in 1639, and his two eldest children had passed away in 1628 and 1640. This left Nicolaes Jacobsz and Celia as the sole heirs of the family business. Across the Low Countries it was common practice for the privilege of the courantier to be passed down the family. Perhaps in this case, Smient had a closer relationship with the Amsterdam burgomasters; Jacobsz’s name was not mentioned when the burgomasters granted Smient the position.

In response to being snubbed, Jacobsz moved to the small town of Weesp, less than two hours by barge from Amsterdam. Here, Jacobsz started a newspaper of his own. By January 1656, only several weeks after Smient’s appointment, the Weesp press was born.<sup>6</sup>

The earliest extant edition of this Weesp newspaper dates from Saturday 25 March 1656. Given that this is issue thirteen, it seems likely that Jacobsz published the first issue on Saturday 1 January, shortly after the Amsterdam paper was awarded to Smient. In a clear act of defiance, Jacobsz entitled his newspaper the Courante uyt Italien ende Duytschlant, &c., a direct imitation of his father-in-law’s newspaper. He also published it on Saturdays, and presented it in an identical structure and form, printed on both sides of a half-sheet folio. The only obvious difference between the Amsterdam Courante and its Weesp rival was the striking contrast in the imprint. The Amsterdam edition was “printed by Otto Barentsz Smient, authorised courantier of this city, also printer and bookseller, on the Reguliersbreestraat”, whereas the Weesp newspaper was “printed by Nicolaes Jacobsz, son-in-law of the late Jan van Hilten, authorised stadsdrukker of Weesp, in the Slijkstraat”. Jacobsz’s shop in Weesp was called the “gebor-duyrde handschoen” (embroidered glove), the same name as Jan van Hilten’s shop in Amsterdam.

Jacobsz’s move to Weesp was intended as a temporary venture. In May 1656 Jacobsz petitioned the Amsterdam burgomasters to move the publication of his newspaper to the city.<sup>7</sup> He emphasised his lineage, presenting himself as the natural successor to Jan van Hilten. In moving to Weesp, Jacobsz had wanted to prove that he was an able courantier, worthy of his father-in-law’s name. The burgomasters refused: they considered that the four courantiers in Amsterdam provided enough newspapers. Pressure from Otto Barentsz Smient may also have persuaded them that two competing ventures with the same title was harmful for the industry.

While this blow could have felled any ambitious entrepreneur, Jacobsz did not give in. He continued his venture, maintaining a rival Courante uyt Italien in Weesp for at least four years. Ten issues of this newspaper have survived between 25 March 1656 and 21 September 1660, located in Stockholm, St Petersburg and Oldenburg. Jacobsz’s success is all the more impressive given that he was the first printer to settle in Weesp. No publications are known from any Weesp press before 1656, and it is very well possible that the first book printed in Weesp was in fact an issue of Jacobsz’s Courante. Jacobsz’s ambition seems to have paid off. Weesp was a small town of a few thousand inhabitants, one-hundredth the size of Amsterdam. Weesp did boast a ringed wall, and presented a strategic location for the protection of Holland, just south of Muiden, on the river Vecht. It was also a common stopover on one of the main routes from Northern Holland towards Utrecht, Gelderland, and the Holy Roman Empire. A great deal of traffic passed through and around Weesp; in 1642 a barge-canal, the second in the Dutch Republic, was opened between Amsterdam and Weesp.<sup>8</sup> Regular services ran four times a day, ensuring that one could travel from Weesp to Amsterdam within a couple of hours.

These developments turned Weesp into an ideal location for a scorned courantier like Jacobsz. The burgomasters of Amsterdam had no say regarding his activities in Weesp, but Jacobsz could sell his newspaper on the same day as Smient's Courante through his connections in the Amsterdam book trade. There would have been few newspaper readers in Weesp, but with a large market nearby, this was not a great concern. Furthermore, the location of Weesp on the route to the east allowed Jacobsz to despatch his newspaper to customers in the eastern regions of the Dutch Republic several hours ahead of Smient.

The Weesp Courante became a serious rival to the Amsterdam edition. While Jacobsz imitated the style and title of the Amsterdam newspaper, he maintained an independent network of correspondents. A comparison of several issues from 1657 of the Weesp and Amsterdam editions demonstrates a clear difference in the news reports presented by the two courantiers.<sup>9</sup> Jacobsz focused on gathering news from the Baltic and the Holy Roman Empire, while Smient specialised more in southern European news sources.

In order to differentiate further between the two ventures Smient changed the wording of the title of his Courante slightly: "Duytschlant" became "Duytslant", and the words "Italien" and "Duytslant" were both italicised. The assertion that Smient was the "authorised" courantier of Amsterdam served as a reminder that he published the authentic version of the newspaper. For his part, Nicolaes Jacobsz continued to emphasise the connection with his late father-in-law, always reminding customers of his familial heritage. Jacobsz's newspaper was popular enough that several Amsterdam booksellers advertised in his newspaper, some as early as March 1656. The heirs of Jodocus Janssonius, Cornelis de Leeuw, Isaak de la Tombe and Gerrit Willemsz Doornik all placed advertisements in the Weesp Courante. Given the low number of surviving issues it seems certain that other booksellers and publishers did the same. Jacobsz's newspaper was also read beyond Amsterdam: on 25 March 1656 the magistrates of the eastern town of Doesburg notified readers of the Weesp Courante of their forthcoming annual market.<sup>10</sup>

The Weesp Courante was supported by the local magistrates and used by the regents as a source of publicity. The appearance of a printing press and a weekly newspaper in the town was a source of pride, and advertised the importance of the small town to a wider national market. On 23 June 1657, just over a year after the arrival of Jacobsz, the Weesp magistrates announced the re-opening of their Latin school—an announcement which they placed in their local paper.<sup>11</sup> The notification of three ox-markets in the autumn of 1657 also appeared in the newspaper.<sup>12</sup>

Apart from his newspaper, next to nothing is known of Jacobsz's time in Weesp. In 1659 he moved to the St Jorisstraat, where he lived opposite the city hall, again in the "embroidered glove". No other publications of his press have thus far been identified. As the first printer in the town it seems almost certain that he was responsible for administrative jobbing printing for the magistrates, and he may also have published necessary texts for the new Latin school.

The final extant issue of the Weesp Courante, of 21 September 1660, was unnumbered, and published on a Tuesday rather than a Saturday. This could indicate that Jacobsz's venture was running out of steam. Although he made a formidable challenge to Smient and the Amsterdam magistrates, the advantage always lay with the Amsterdam edition. Yet the early success of Jacobsz's newspaper inspired another periodical venture in Weesp. In 1665 the Amsterdam bookseller Samuel Imbrechts (1631–1679) and the printer Mattijs Perfect (1620–?) signed a contract to co-publish a weekly newspaper, the Oprechte Donderdagse Courante, printed by Perfect in Weesp and sold in Amsterdam by Imbrechts.<sup>13</sup> The first issue of this venture appeared in Weesp in February 1666, testament to Jacobsz's dogged determination to right the wrong done to his family.

8 See, for example, a notification placed in the Courante uyt Italien of Jan van Hilten on 7 June 1642, which specifies that the new canal barge service between Amsterdam and Weesp takes less than two hours. Courante uyt Italien ende Duytschlandt, &c. 1642. No. 23. 07.06.1642.

Post-tydingen uyt 'sGraven-Hage The Hague, 1656–1662

At the start of January 1656 the courantier Adriaen Vlacq (1600–1667) transformed his newspaper. Since April 1653 Vlacq had published the Wekelycke Nieuws every Friday.<sup>1</sup> Now, on Tuesday 4 January 1656, Vlacq published the first issue of the Post-tydingen uyt 'sGraven-Hage. The Post-tydingen was half the size of the Wekelycke Nieuws, printed on a half-sheet of paper folded in quarto to make four pages of news. At the end of page four, Vlacq justified this transformation to his reader:

Advertisement. For the convenience and benefit of those interested in new tidings, we have decided to circulate our post-tidings from now on in a half sheet of paper; this will nevertheless contain just as much news as there was presented on a full sheet; and in quarto rather than in any other format, so that those who wish to gather up [the issues] will be able to bind them together at the end of the year, and keep them as a history of what has passed; even if not all will be accurate, at least it will please some curious persons; as we could do no more than to gather together whatever has come to us through good intelligence, in no manner expecting that we will be able to please everyone, for if we could, then we would disappoint nobody.<sup>2</sup>

In his announcement Vlacq ignored the greatest change to his newspaper: the Post-tydingen would appear twice a week, on Tuesdays and Fridays. This was a shrewd makeover. By halving the size of the issues, Vlacq continued to use a full sheet of paper every week; but with a bi-weekly schedule of publication the Post-tydingen would contain fresher news than its predecessor. Local competition may also have motivated Vlacq to rebrand his periodical. Since the autumn of 1655 Gerard Lodewijk van der Macht (c. 1622–1698) had published the bi-weekly

Haegsche Weekelycke Mercurius, supplemented with irregular topical news pamphlets.<sup>3</sup> A successful courantier was required to keep up with the times.

The appearance of the Post-tydingen was inspired partly by the English serial newsbooks of the 1640s, which Vlacq encountered when working in the London book trade in the 1630s and 1640s.<sup>4</sup> The quarto format of the Post-tydingen, its one centred column of news and a large black letter typeface (at a time when many Dutch newspapers began to experiment with roman typefaces) was influenced by an English tradition of news publishing rather than a Dutch style. The title of his newspaper also followed closely the English model: “Post-tidings from The Hague, from the 12th of May until the 16th of May”. This phrasing was very common on English newsbooks, but seldom found in Dutch newspapers. The date range given in the title did not indicate the dating of the news reports in the issue, but the dates when the news reports had arrived in Vlacq’s shop in The Hague. The issues did not carry a date of publication in the colophon, but it can safely be presumed that the issues were always published on the last day given in the title-sequence.

The Post-tydingen appeared on Tuesday and Fridays in 1656 and early 1657. In May 1657 Vlacq changed the publication dates to Mondays and Thursdays. The Haegsche Weekelycke Mercurius appeared on Mondays and Thursdays also; perhaps Vlacq found that readers in The Hague were less inclined to buy and read his newspaper a day after buying the issues of Van der Macht.

Vlacq encouraged readers in his announcement of 4 January 1656 to collect and bind together the issues of the Post-tydingen. To support this practice, the issues of the newspaper were signed and paginated in one continuous sequence through the year. It is unfortunate then, and not a compliment to Vlacq’s craftsmanship, that out of a corpus of 310 surviving issues, around a third were wrongly titled, misnumbered, missigned or mispaginated.<sup>5</sup> From 1 For the Wekelycke Nieuws and further details of Vlacq’s life see chapters 23 and 34.

While it seems that the quarto format highlighted in the announcement was a new feature to the Post-tydingen, Vlacq had published the Wekelycke Nieuws in quarto also. It is likely that Vlacq emphasised the quarto format given that most Dutch readers will have been more familiar with the half-sheet folio format.

4 On English newsbooks see Raymond, Making the News, and his Invention of the Newspaper.

5 This includes two variants. I have inspected 295 issues of the total surviving corpus. Most surviving issues date from 1657–1659, with very few extant issues for 1660–1662. Most survivors can be found in Wolfenbüttel (266 issues), St Petersburg (104 issues) and Amsterdam (90 issues), with other copies located in Gdańsk, The Hague, the survival of two variants we know that Vlacq did occasionally correct such mistakes—but sequential runs of un-signed or missigned issues also suggests that Vlacq did not oversee the printing of his newspaper with any care. Fifty-four surviving issues carried no signature statement at all; and Vlacq misnumbered every single issue in November 1658 and December 1659. Every seventeenth-century newspaper featured proofreading errors at some point. But the scale of error in the Post-tydingen suggests an abnormally chaotic or disorderly production.

The Post-tydingen was, at first sight, not a failure. It was published until 1662 (the last known issue dates from 13 April of that year), and Vlacq transformed the Post-tydingen into the Haegse Post-Tydingen at the start of 1663.<sup>6</sup> With the expulsion of Van der Macht to Utrecht in 1658, Vlacq had the local market in The Hague to himself. Nevertheless, it seems that to Vlacq the newspaper business never took centre stage. The Post-tydingen never featured his name, and from February 1657 it also lost the statement that the newspaper was “sold in the great hall in ‘de Fortuyn (the Fortune)’”, a statement which had also featured on the Wekelycke Nieuws. Vlacq was first and foremost a mathematician and a scholarly publisher with an impressive corpus of scientific, medical and mathematical texts.

Vlacq's business rested on this scholarly reputation—and perhaps it even supported his newspaper. The anonymous Post-tydingen had limited appeal amongst potential advertisers, unlike the Amsterdam and Haarlem newspapers, which by this point featured advertisements in almost every single issue. The magistrates of Utrecht placed an announcement six times in the Post-tydingen in April 1658 regarding a change in the timing of their annual market and civic procession, but there were few other advertisers. One finds a couple of notifications concerning barge times between Delft and Leiden, and appeals for lost jewellery and letters. The most prominent commercial advertisement would be placed by Vlacq himself on 7 October 1658 for five different scholarly tomes available at his shop.<sup>7</sup>

The range of news reports in the Post-tydingen changed little throughout its publication. Vlacq gathered together a steady supply of reports from major European news centres, though his network was concentrated more on Northern Europe than the Mediterranean world. The Post-tydingen usually featured reports from Paris and London; there were frequent reports from Vienna, Danzig, Hamburg and Frankfurt, and readers were often offered a report from Madrid and one or two reports from Italy. The number of reports in the Post-tydingen decreased from the second half of 1658—interestingly just after Van der Macht's move to Utrecht. Vlacq usually published around eight or nine reports per issue in 1656 and 1657, but from 1658 onwards this steadily declined to six or seven. If an issue was particularly short on news Vlacq would place a large woodcut vignette on the final page to fill the space—such issues would contain only around 1,000 words of news, less than half the quantity of Vlacq's rivals. The margins of the four-page issues were often spacious, certainly in comparison to the tightly-filled margins of the half-sheet folios from Amsterdam and Haarlem.

The anonymity of the Post-tydingen, its poor production values, and its limited popularity amongst advertisers sets it apart from its competitors throughout the Dutch Republic. At a time when other publishers were expanding the content and appeal of the newspaper, Vlacq's Post-tydingen was a cut below the rest. Vlacq had made a shrewd transformation in 1656, but would have to do so again in 1663—this time he would adopt the half-sheet format, and establish a partnership with the Amsterdam bookseller Pieter Aertsen to split the costs of production. With this final venture Vlacq would at last place his name on his newspaper, no longer hiding in embarrassed scholarly anonymity.

NB.

The spelling of the title of the Post-tydingen changed frequently. Vlacq used various spellings of The Hague: S'Gravenhage, 'sGravenhage, and Hage, Haghe or hage, with and without hyphenation. The spelling of the days of the week (Tuesday and Friday, then Monday and Thursday) was also subject to weekly fluctuations.

Vlacq skipped a number in the sequence in February or March 1660, and another two numbers between April and September of the same year. He also skipped two numbers sometime in the period between January and April in 1662.

Oprechte Haerlemse Courant Haarlem, 1656–1700

In 1650 there was little indication that the most popular newspaper of the Dutch Golden Age would be published in Haarlem. No newspaper had yet appeared in Haarlem, a city of around 40,000 inhabitants, and one of the oldest and largest in the province of Holland. Thanks to the influx of thousands of Southern Netherlandish immigrants, Haarlem flourished in the first half of the seventeenth century as a major centre of the linen trade and beer brewing; but it also attracted many painters, brokers and tulip dealers. Together with Amsterdam and Leiden, Haarlem formed a triangular system of highly integrated commercial hubs, situated around the rough waters of the Haarlemmermeer.

The absence of a Haarlem newspaper before the 1650s is explained primarily by the ease with which the citizens of Haarlem could get access to newspapers published in Amsterdam. Located at the heart of the information capital of the Dutch Republic, the Amsterdam newspapermen had the best chance to be first with the news; and thanks to the state's sophisticated networks of barges and postal routes, a Haarlem merchant would receive his morning's paper on the same day as a merchant in Amsterdam. With six competing courantiërs in Amsterdam in the 1640s, the Haarlem burgher was spoilt for choice. Yet from the mid-1650s onwards a Haarlem newspaper would take over from the Amsterdam papers the position of the leading newspaper in the Dutch market. This was a position which this newspaper would retain, remarkably, until the early nineteenth century. The style and form of the Oprechte Haerlemse Courant, as it was known from 1662, would be imitated by other newsmen, but none would be as successful in creating a brand which resonated quality and reliability. The newspaper would not only be read throughout the Dutch Republic, but widely across Europe. Issues would regularly be translated at the court of the Russian Tsar, and reprinted in England in the final decades of the seventeenth century.<sup>1</sup> Today issues of the Oprechte Haerlemse Courant from the seventeenth century can be found in twenty-seven archives and libraries around the world. Of all of its contemporaries it had the best rate of survival, with over 5,700 extant issues. The newspaper has survived in near-complete runs between 1665–1679 and 1683–1700, most notably in collections in Haarlem and Amsterdam. More than 3,400 issues are found in multiple copies, and over 500 variants have thus far been identified.

The man responsible for the creation of the first Haarlem newspaper and its lasting success was the Mennonite Abraham Casteleyn (1628–1681).<sup>2</sup> Casteleyn was the youngest son of Vincent (I) Casteleyn, a prominent Haarlem printer and bookseller who held the position of stadsdrukker from 1642 until his death in 1658. Most of the Casteleyn children found their way into the book or art trade, and were established members of artistic artisanal elite.<sup>3</sup> Vincent Casteleyn had a prosperous business on the corner of the Grote Houtstraat and the Grote Markt, in between the city hall and St Bavo church. His youngest son Abraham was established by 1653 as a member of the booksellers' guild in the city, working independently in his father's shop.<sup>4</sup>

It was in this shop, the "Suyckerhuys" (sugarhouse), that Abraham Casteleyn published the first issue of the Weeckelycke Courante van Europa, a weekly Saturday paper, on 8 January 1656.<sup>5</sup> It was no coincidence that Casteleyn started his newspaper around this time. We know exactly what had motivated Casteleyn to take this momentous step because of the survival of an extraordinary document. In the mid-nineteenth century the famous Haarlem publishing house Johannes Enschedé & Sons, which had acquired the Oprechte Haerlemse Courant in 1737, was notified by an antiquarian collector of a small printed advertisement issued by Abraham Casteleyn, dated from January 1656.<sup>6</sup> This advertisement was distributed by Casteleyn along with the first issue of his newspaper to various booksellers throughout the Dutch Republic. The advertisement revealed that Casteleyn had been an established newsletter writer before he started his newspaper, supplying the Amsterdam courantier, Jan van Hilten (c. 1602–1655) with reports for his weekly Courante uyt Italien.<sup>7</sup> The text of the advertisement read:

Sir. The falseness of the newspapers which nowadays inform us of the movements of this troubled world, had motivated me, on behalf of some interested persons and for my own satisfaction, to write for special newsletters from the most important places in Europe, a process which has not been possible without some trouble and expense. The late Mr Jan van Hilten asked me, when he saw these [newsletters] at my house, to put them or something from them at his service every week, a thing which I did now and again and which made his newspapers better than those of the others. But after Mr van Hilten died, I judged it best no longer to remain a slave of others, and print news for myself, despite other courantiers requesting my newsletters ...<sup>8</sup>

Jan van Hilten had died in November 1655, and his Courante uyt Italien was taken over by Otto Barentsz Smient. Casteleyn saw an opportune moment to establish his own venture. There is, however, another reason why Casteleyn was able to start a newspaper around this time. From 1654 onwards the magistrates of Amsterdam had limited competition in the Amsterdam newspaper trade. The four remaining weekly newspapers were required to alternate publication, with only two issues published each week. This reduction in the number of issues available in Amsterdam enabled new entrepreneurs, such as Adriaen Vlacq and Gerard Lodewijk van der Macht in The Hague, to compete for customers. It too opened the way for a news writer like Casteleyn, who would be able to use his international connections to create a highly successful business.

The popularity of the Oprechte Haerlemse Courant is indicated by the rapid expansion of the paper. On 18 June 1658 Abraham Casteleyn published the first issue of the Haerlemse Dingsdaeghse Courant, a weekly Tuesday edition of the paper. At the start of 1659 he changed the title of the Saturday edition from Weeckelijcke Courante van Europa to Haerlemse Saterdaeghse Courant. Already from the autumn of 1656 Casteleyn's issues were popular with advertisers spread throughout the country, a clear sign that his publicity campaign in 1656 had paid off. The 135 surviving issues of the Haarlem paper published between 1656 and 1664 contain 319 advertisements and public announcements, almost as many as the four fortnightly Amsterdam papers of the same period put together, and far more than newspapers published in The Hague and Utrecht. This is all the more extraordinary given that the Amsterdam newsmen had decades to build up networks of subscribers and distributors.

The Amsterdam newspapers were the primary competitors of Casteleyn's Oprechte Haerlemse Courant, and Casteleyn purposefully modelled his paper on the style established in Amsterdam by the Van Hiltens and Broer Jansz in the early seventeenth century. The Oprechte Haerlemse Courant was published as a double-sided half-sheet folio, printed in double columns and featuring a simple, sober heading as title. But Casteleyn contributed some developments which would later be taken up by rivals elsewhere in the country. Rather than print his issues in a black letter typeface, thus far the preferred design of the Amsterdam papers, from the start of his venture Casteleyn began to experiment with the use of small roman typefaces to increase the amount of texts he could fit into the columns of his paper. In order to guide the reader through the densely-packed text, Casteleyn also introduced a geographical sub-division of reports, presenting reports from Spain, Italy, France, the Holy Roman Empire, Poland and Prussia, the British Isles, and the Low Countries under separate headings. This was a distinct departure from the traditional chronological presentation of news reports in Dutch newspapers; Casteleyn popularised an organisation which allowed readers to read more selectively, focusing on specific news theatres and sources of news. Casteleyn also abandoned the practice of presenting news reports "below the line", a practice first developed by the pioneers of the Dutch news trade. Instead Casteleyn offered a variety of domestic reports datelined from Amsterdam, The Hague and a selection of Dutch ports.

Casteleyn's typographical experiments proved successful. Within a couple of years of publication the issues of the Oprechte Haerlemse Courant regularly contained over twenty reports per issue, and most issues were composed of close to 3,000 words. Thus far the Amsterdam papers had set the standard of publication in the Dutch Republic: from the 1630s until the 1660s they usually featured around 2,000–2,500 words of text and fifteen reports per issue. From the mid-1660s the Amsterdam courantiers began to follow Casteleyn's lead, and Otto Barentsz Smient, Jan Jacobsz Bouman and Johannes (III) van Ravesteyn all increasingly modelled their publications on Casteleyn's paper.<sup>9</sup> Sara Vlamincx, the publisher of the Ordinarise Middel-weeckse Courante, fell somewhat behind the new standard.<sup>10</sup> Casteleyn continued to stretch the limits of his newspaper: by the early 1670s the issues of the Oprechte Haerlemse Courant were printed wholly in a small roman typeface, and most issues contained at least 3,200 words.

In October 1662 Casteleyn added the word Oprechte (Authentic) to the title of his newspaper, and placed a small woodcut of the coat of arms of Haarlem at the centre of the title.<sup>11</sup> He took these measures because others had already begun to profit from his evident success by publishing pirate editions. Casteleyn was deeply troubled by the reproduction of his newspaper in other Dutch cities: such reprints devalued Casteleyn's brand, and could diminish his sales.<sup>12</sup> They were especially troublesome because Casteleyn did not have the legal power to prosecute printers outside Haarlem for this dubious practice. Instead he had to rely on his customers to choose the authentic issues. On 18 June 1667 Casteleyn placed a notification in his newspaper which warned that an impostor named Pieter Symonsz was reprinting issues of the Oprechte Haerlemse Courant, including some of the news reports printed by Casteleyn, but also featuring older reports of questionable credibility.<sup>13</sup> Three days later Casteleyn repeated the same notification, adding that he now knew that Symonsz was operating from Amsterdam, Casteleyn's largest market.<sup>14</sup> None of Symonsz's reprints have survived, but the Kungliga Biblioteket in Stockholm does contain two anonymous reprints of the Oprechte Haerlemse Courant from 1675.<sup>15</sup> The reproductions are sophisticated: they include a near-identical copy of the woodcut emblem used on Casteleyn's authentic issues. Clearly such reprints continued to plague Casteleyn's business deep into his career.

Casteleyn also suffered from rivalries at home in Haarlem. On 16 September 1664 Abraham complained to the magistrates of Haarlem that his brothers Pieter and Johannes and his cousin Vincent (II) Casteleyn were printing and distributing "post-tidings", in breach of Abraham's privilege.<sup>16</sup> The magistrates condemned this infringement, and prohibited Abraham's relatives from printing and selling any news. Abraham had a poor relationship with his older brother Pieter (1618–1676), who had his own print shop on the other side of the Grote Markt.<sup>17</sup> Pieter published the hugely successful Hollandse Mercurius, an annual political review of European events, for which he made ample use of his younger brother's newspaper.<sup>18</sup> In 1662, when their mother died, the family shop (the "Suyckerhuys") fell into Pieter's hands, and he promptly evicted his younger brother.<sup>19</sup> A tenacious businessman, Abraham moved across the street, setting up shop on the other corner of the Grote Houtstraat and the Grote Markt, in the "Blye Druck" (joyous print). The fraternal conflict had been fuelled by the decision of the magistrates to appoint Abraham as the new stadsdrukker when Vincent (I) Casteleyn died in 1658, choosing the younger courantier over the more experienced Pieter.<sup>20</sup> When they reaffirmed their support for Abraham in 1664, the magistrates gave a clear indication that they approved of Abraham and his Oprechte Haerlemse Courant. The newspaper was not only an asset for the urban community, but a proud feature of Haarlem's prominence in the Dutch Republic.

Up to his death in January 1681, Abraham Casteleyn would remain in the "Blye Druck" (see ill. 31.1). Since he was stadsdrukker and courantier, Casteleyn's shop was a prominent location in the city. The Haarlem poet Laurens van Elstland, remembering Haarlem from a distant posting in the East Indies, mused when crossing the market square that "here lives the courantier, who binds joyous printings ["blye drukken", a play on Casteleyn's shop]".<sup>21</sup> Most of Casteleyn's business revolved around his newspaper and orders for ordinances and proclamations from the magistrates. He also printed numerous Latin orations and occasional poetry, and from 1677 took over the publication of the Hollandse Mercurius after the death of Pieter Casteleyn. From 1661 onwards he was assisted by his wife, Margaretha van Bancken (1628–1695); the couple sat for an impressive double portrait by Jan de Bray two years after their marriage. This offers a delicate rendering of an affectionate relationship; it also displays the wealth and status that the couple had built from their strategic position in Haarlem society.<sup>22</sup>

By 1667 the Oprechte Haerlemse Courant had achieved such success that Casteleyn decided to add an additional issue on Thursdays. Casteleyn first announced this to his readers in his issue of 24 May 1667: “for the contentment of the news-hungry reader it is my intention, now that the French, Brabant and English letters often arrive early, to publish something special, when the content merits publication; although I will retain the most remarkable news for the ordinary issues on Saturday and Tuesday.”<sup>23</sup> Casteleyn first printed a Thursday issue on 9 June 1667, entitled the Extraordinaire Haerlemse Donderdaegse Courant.<sup>24</sup> Casteleyn confirmed to the reader that “this is the first time that I present you with this extraordinary issue, so that you will not have to wait until Saturday ... although the most remarkable reports will be reserved for the Saturday issue.” Casteleyn’s statements and the new title might have suggested to readers that the publication of the Thursday issue was a temporary addition—but this was not the case. The Oprechte Haerlemse Courant would henceforth be a tri-weekly newspaper published on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday.

Casteleyn maintained the title Extraordinaire on the Thursday issue despite the fact that it was now a regular publication. This could be regarded as a strange decision, but it may hint at a greater truth. Casteleyn was seriously testing the limits of his resources and the tastes of his customers by publishing a third issue on Thursdays. The purchase of a newspaper was, to many readers, a relative indulgence; and initially Casteleyn struggled to fill the pages of the Thursday issue. The account books of the Oprechte Haerlemse Courant of the mid-eighteenth century reveal that the Thursday issue remained the least popular of the three: many subscribers preferred to receive only the Tuesday and Saturday issues.<sup>25</sup> While no account books have survived for the seventeenth century, it seems that the Extraordinaire Haerlemse Donderdaegse Courant was not well received by many readers during its first few years of publication. The survival of numerous typographical variants reveal that Casteleyn used two printing presses to produce the Tuesday and Saturday issue, but that he used only a single press for the Thursday issue.<sup>26</sup> Furthermore, the Thursday issue was much less popular with advertisers. Between 1667 and 1677, the first ten and a half years of publication, the Thursday issues contained 465 advertisements and public announcements; during the same period the Tuesday issues contained 1,189 and the Saturday issues contained 971. By the end of the seventeenth century the Thursday issues had gained in popularity: between 1691 and 1700 they contained 2,624 advertisements and announcements, a little lower than the Tuesday (2,840) and Saturday (2,951) issues.

The Oprechte Haerlemse Courant was such a popular newspaper because, as contemporary observers frequently commented, it published the best news in the country.<sup>27</sup> The newspaper featured the largest spread of news reports in the Dutch Republic; most surviving issues present well over twenty reports. Casteleyn, like any good courantier, meticulously followed the shifting theatres of warfare throughout Europe, and it is difficult to identify any distinct lacunae in his news gathering. The large quantity of surviving issues and the copious number of news reports featured in each may give the impression that there are few differences between the issues of the Oprechte Haerlemse Courant; but in fact, the profile of the three weekly issues was remarkably distinct. The Tuesday issues had a strong focus on the Baltic (with incoming reports from Warsaw, Stockholm, Copenhagen and a variety of Polish and Prussian towns), and the Holy Roman Empire (with regular correspondence from Vienna, Regensburg, Cologne, Strasbourg, Frankfurt, Berlin and Zürich or Basel). The Tuesday issues also included multiple reports from London and Edinburgh, and at least two or three reports from the Italian Peninsula. On Saturdays the Oprechte Haerlemse Courant concentrated predominantly on the Mediterranean world and France. Issues frequently contained a lengthy stream of reports from Italy and multiple reports from Paris and other French towns. The Thursday issues focused largely on the British Isles and Paris: here the reader was most likely to find a string of reports from Ireland, Scotland, and England’s south coast, and at least two or three reports from London. Frequently the Thursday issues also included two or three reports from the Iberian Peninsula (most notably Lisbon, Madrid and Cádiz). Sometimes the Thursday issues featured a number of short reports from Italy, Vienna and Cologne at the end of the final column, indicating that they would often arrive in Haarlem late on Wednesdays. While all three Haarlem issues regularly included reports from Ghent, Brussels, Amsterdam, and two from The Hague, the Thursday issues commonly included a wider spread of Netherlandish towns and ports.

26 See my article, “Towards a complete bibliography of seventeenth-century Dutch newspapers: Delpher and its applications”, Tijdschrift voor Tijdschriftstudies 38 (2015), pp. 21–27, and see the following bibliographical lists.

27 See, for a few examples, chapter 3 in part one.

Oprechte Haerlemse Courant in multiple copies (a rarity for seventeenth-century newspapers), we know that Casteleyn was a painstaking editor. The Oprechte Haerlemse Courant was frequently subject to “stop-press” interventions, halting the printing process and resetting the composition of the text to include late incoming reports. Over 500 seventeenth-century variants of the Oprechte Haerlemse Courant have been identified. Around half of these are distinguished only by minor typographical differences, indicating that the issues were composed twice for printing on two different presses. The other variants contain “stop-press” interventions on the back page of the issue. Casteleyn was perfectly happy to remove advertisements and announcements to make space for a late report. He often removed an advertisement to enter a second report from The Hague, always written the day before publication. At other times this intervention was more drastic: on 17 April 1671 four advertisements were removed to make space for a report from London.<sup>28</sup> We do not know whether Casteleyn would reimburse advertisers for this.

Casteleyn's success as newspaper publisher rested securely on his experience as a newsletter writer. But this was success achieved only with considerable risk and political finesse. Well into his career as courantier, Casteleyn provided statesmen and diplomats in the Dutch Republic and abroad with his most valuable and sensitive correspondence, receiving in return cherished reports for his own newspaper. Casteleyn exchanged news with the Tuscan ambassador in London, the deputy to the Danish ambassador in The Hague, and the notorious news writer, diplomat and spy Abraham de Wicquefort (1606–1682).<sup>29</sup> He also maintained contact with the English under-secretary of state, Joseph Williamson (1633–1701), exchanging confidential news reports at the height of Anglo-Dutch conflict in the 1660s and 1670s.<sup>30</sup> Casteleyn was lucky that his correspondence with Williamson was not compromised—other news agents were arrested and tortured for such treachery. At least one English statesman knew of the arrangements between Casteleyn and Williamson: in November 1663 George Downing wrote back to England “pray tell Mr Williamson that always, word for word, I find in this gazette [the Oprechte Haerlemse Courant] the same news he sends me.”<sup>31</sup>

Despite these dubious news gathering practices, Casteleyn did not suffer any suspensions or fines during his career as newspaper publisher; some of his contemporaries, like Gerard Lodewijk van der Macht (c. 1622–1698) and Crispijn Hoeckwater (1642–1731), were not so lucky.<sup>32</sup> But to stay out of trouble Casteleyn frequently had to rely on his close relationship with the local Haarlem magistrates. The States of Holland received, on numerous occasions, complaints regarding reports published in the Oprechte Haerlemse Courant, from the Russian Tsar, the Swedish ambassador and various English diplomats.<sup>33</sup> On 24 February 1670 the Court of Holland demanded that Casteleyn appear in The Hague to answer for the inclusion of copies of secret resolutions and letters in his newspaper.<sup>34</sup> The magistrates of Haarlem defied the ruling, arguing that they alone could prosecute Casteleyn. When the Court tried to insist Casteleyn visit The Hague in 1675 after their interrogation of Abraham de Wicquefort, the magistrates once more defended their courantier, allowing Casteleyn to be questioned in Haarlem only.<sup>35</sup> Again, Casteleyn was not arrested.

When Abraham Casteleyn died the Oprechte Haerlemse Courant was continued by his widow, Margaretha van Bancken.<sup>36</sup> She remarried in 1682 and maintained the venture successfully until her death in 1695, when Gerard Casteleyn (1665–1702), her son with Abraham, became the new courantier.<sup>37</sup> Gerard obtained a law degree at the University of Leiden in 1687 before returning to Haarlem, presumably to help his mother with the publication of the Oprechte Haerlemse Courant and the day-to-day business of the shop. He became a member of the Reformed church, and married Anna Maria Colterman in 1698. On 15 August 1701 Gerard Casteleyn was elected to the council of Haarlem magistrates, a life-long position. That the Casteleyn family should rise to these heights is confirmation of the prestige associated with the tri-weekly newspaper, and the success of Casteleyn's alliance with the civic elite.

Gerard Casteleyn only enjoyed his position on the Haarlem council for a year, because he died in 1702. His widow continued the business, remarrying another member of the Haarlem council in 1705.<sup>38</sup> Colterman published the Oprechte Haerlemse Courant until her death in 1737, whilst the editing of the newspaper was managed by Jan Abraham Casteleyn (1687–1774), a grandson of Pieter Casteleyn.<sup>39</sup> From 1662 until the death of Colterman the imprint of the Oprechte Haerlemse Courant was left unchanged: it continued to read “printed in Haarlem, by Abraham Casteleyn, stadsdrukker, on the market in the ‘Blye Druck’”. Evidently Abraham’s successors knew that the brand of the Oprechte Haerlemse Courant relied on the reputation of its founder as much as the quality of its news reports. The Casteleyn imprint statement only disappeared in 1737, when the newspaper was bought by Izaak and Johannes Enschedé, whose descendants maintained the newspaper until its fusion with the Haarlems Dagblad in 1942.

The Enschedés kept alive the memory of Abraham Casteleyn and the formative years of the Oprechte Haerlemse Courant. On 8 January 1856, exactly two hundred years after Abraham Casteleyn published the first Haarlem newspaper, the publishing house of Johannes Enschedé and Sons held a great celebration. The issue of the Oprechte Haerlemsche Courant published that day included a facsimile of the first issue of the Weeckelijcke Courante van Europa together with the advertisement circulated by Casteleyn. For the celebratory occasion a short poem was also printed by the publishing house and distributed throughout the city.<sup>40</sup> The poem was voiced by Abraham

Casteleyn, resurrected in the middle of the nineteenth century. After expressing his wonder at the success of his newspaper and the modern age, he wishes Jan van Hilten could have returned with him, to enjoy the festivities and share in the glory of the Oprechte Haerlemse Courant:

Van Hilten would have deserved it
For he was such a worthy friend of mine
Who could have dared dream
That from a little pastime
Such an enormous enterprise
Would flourish in later centuries.

NB.

Casteleyn skipped number 32 in the sequence of the Oprechte Haerlemse Courant in 1665, jumping from 31 to 33 and only realising his mistake at the end of the year. No Thursday issue was published on 8 September 1667 due to illness.

The spelling of the Oprechte Haerlemse Courant underwent continuous changes. Weeckelycke Courante quickly became Weeckelijcke Courante; Extraordinare became Extraordinaire; Dingsdaegse was alternatively spelled Dinghsdaeghse or Dingsdaeghse; Saturdaegse was alternatively spelled Saterdaeghse or Saterdaegse; Donderdaegse was alternatively spelled Donderdaeghse; and Courante became Courant from 1659 onwards.
